PREFACE.

WE do not present this book to the public as a model literary effort, but expect it to be classed with county histories only. Neither do we claim it to be a complete history, since no complete history was ever written. But we do claim it to be a record of the most important items that could be collected by one person in over two years of unceasing labor. The object of the book is to preserve certain valuable items relative to the county's past and present, which, but for the preparation of such a book, could not have been collected. With the failing memories of the citizens, and the passing away of many of the pioneers, the opportunity for obtaining such items would soon have been lost.

The writer has spared neither time, trouble nor expense, and in addition to riding 172 miles by rail within the limits of the county, has traveled, by actual count, in a carriage, 883 miles, stopping for neither cold nor stormy weather. Doubtless some mistakes occur; but our best judgment has been used, and we have conscientiously striven to keep out as many errors as possible. Since not more than ten men out of every hundred interviewed could give the exact date of their marriage, it will not be strange if some of the dates are wrong. A number of men could not give the number of their children without stopping to count them up. Several would have left out one of their children's names had not the child appeared during the interview. One man averred he had ten children, but upon counting them over time and again, said, "I guess there are only nine, but I thought there were ten!" Upon asking one man if any of his children were in the army, he said, "Yes, a boy and a girl," which statement he afterward contradicted. Frequently people are unable to give the names of their married sisters, their grandchildren, and, in some cases, their own children, even. One or two men actually had to study awhile before they could give the names of their own wives. After such answers having been given relating to personal items supposed to be well established in each person's mind, if mistakes occur in this book, they will be the more readily excused, or at least the people will know some of the disadvantages we have labored under in obtaining facts.

There are some worthy and important persons in the county whom we failed to see, which fact is regretted, but it would take many more than one trip over the county ere all of the over fifteen thousand of the county's inhabitants could be found at home, or at leisure sufficient to be interviewed. Although we advertised in the county papers for personal matter, many that we wished to hear from did not reply. Although over one hundred pages have been added that were not promised to our patrons, still we were obliged to cut out some of the personal items. We have endeavored, however, to leave out the sketch of no person who encouraged us to go on with the publishing by agreeing to take one of the books.

In our travels among the old settlers we heard a great deal about the hospitality of the old times, and we want to take this opportunity to assure the public that the county still retains a great deal of that estimable virtue. In the majority of cases we were greeted cordially by the people, and many times were we entertained cheerfully in the homes in the county.

We wish to extend thanks to the people who have encouraged and befriended us in any way in the preparation of this work. Especially do we thank the old settlers who took the pains to recite their deeds of years ago. We also acknowledge the assistance of Mrs. N. D. Scovell in the preparation of the article on geology, and we are grateful for the assistance rendered by Miss Nettie Adams in the arrangement of some of the final notes for the book.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF ILLINOIS.

TOPOGRAPHY OF ILLINOIS.

ILLINOIS, in common with several other states, has the proud distinction of lying within the Mississippi valley. This fact alone places it on an equality with some of the most magnificent states in the Union.

In area, Illinois contains about 55,531 square miles of territory. The greatest length from north to south is near 380 miles. The extreme breadth is a little over 200 miles. It lies between $37^{\circ} 3'$ and $42^{\circ} 30'$ north latitude. Extending thus through a range of over five degrees of latitude, its climate is quite varied, permitting the growth of semi-tropical plants as well as those which are common to the north temperate zone. An excellent system of drainage is furnished by the 2,000 miles of navigable rivers which bound, or take their course through, portions of the state.

Illinois is bounded on the north by Wisconsin. The waters of Lake Michigan, the only one of the great lakes wholly within the United States, form a northeastern boundary line of about sixty miles in length. Indiana and the Wabash river form the eastern boundary line, while the Ohio river, on the southeast and south, separates the State from Kentucky. Illinois is separated from Iowa and Missouri by the Mississippi river, which forms a boundary line about five hundred miles long.

The general surface of the country is level or slightly rolling. Near the large streams, especially in the southern part of the state, quite good-sized hills are found. The highest lands, however, are "The Mounds," in the northwestern part of the state. From these mounds, which have an altitude of over 1,000 feet above the level of the sea, to the southern part of the state, there is a gradual slope of the land toward the southwest. This slope of the country causes the general course of the streams to be toward the Mississippi river.

The Desplaines river, rising in the southeastern part of Wisconsin, and the Kankakee river, which rises in northern Indiana, unite in Grundy county, Illinois, to form the Illinois river — the largest in the state. The Illinois flows almost directly west across La Salle county, until, in Putnam county, it makes a bend, and from thence on to its mouth, about twenty miles above the mouth of the Missouri, the general course is southwest. This river is near five hundred miles long, and is navigable by steamers to La Salle. The Illinois and Michigan canal, extending from this place to Chicago, opens communication by water between the Mississippi river and the Great Lakes. The Rock river in the northern and the Kaskaskia in the southern part are the other principal tributaries of the Mississippi within the state. The Wabash receives the waters of the Embarras, Little Wabash, and Saline Creek, which are the principal streams in southeastern Illinois. Besides the streams mentioned there are many of smaller size, the majority of which flow toward the Mississippi. This state is somewhat remarkable for the small number of lakes and ponds within its boundaries.

Although Illinois is known as the "Prairie State," still it contains a great amount of timber, which is found along all the water-courses. It is a noticeable fact that the amount of timber is constantly on the increase. The prairies, which were once covered with tall grass and flowers, are now dotted here and there with groves of trees, and the cereals have taken the place of the grasses.

The material resources of Illinois are many. Its minerals are a constant source of wealth. Zinc, copper, fire-clay, and many varieties of building stone are found. The Galena lead mines alone would make the state famous, while the coal mines seem exhaustless.

But the agricultural products go beyond all these. It has been said that "perhaps no other country of the same extent on the face of the globe can boast a soil so ubiquitous and its distribution so universally productive." Illinois "is a garden four hundred miles long, and one hundred and fifty miles wide." Portions of the state have been under constant cultivation since the beginning of the French occupation at Kaskaskia, over one hundred and fifty years ago.

CHAPTER II.

ORIGIN OF THE PRAIRIES.

ILLINOIS has long been known as the "Prairie State." By this appellative her fame has been carried from country to country all around the world. Nor has this state been made unjustly famous. The prairies are her pride, and well they may be, for it is owing to their extent and fertility that Illinois has made such rapid advances in civilization. At first their great beauty was their chief attraction. All early writers on the subject, as well as the early settlers of the state, agree in the statement that the vegetable growth on the prairies was, in their time, more profuse than now. The grass grew very high, and when it waved to a summer's breeze it seemed to the pioneer that a sea of great extent stretched out before his vision. A feeling of awe came over him,—that feeling which always comes upon beholding Nature's great handiwork. Marquette, in his account of his first voyage on the Illinois river, over two hundred years ago, made special mention of the beauty and fertility of the prairies.

After their beauty and grandeur, the prairies' next attraction was their utility. Gov. Reynolds said of them: "It is one of the great elements in the rapid growth of Illinois that such large and fertile prairies exist in the state. Nature has made the prairies the finest and most fertile fields in the Union, and has prepared them for cultivation." The experience of persons who have lived since Gov. Reynolds' time proves that his statement is still a truthful one.

One cannot look upon the broad and beautiful prairies without a feeling of wonder as to their origin, which has been a subject of thought for years, and of which there can yet be only conjecture.

In dealing with this subject we can but give the opinion of persons who have given it their long and thoughtful attention. Judge Caton, of Ottawa, Illinois, and H. W. Beckwith, of Danville, Illinois, have both written very instructive and interesting articles on the subject. The unwritten opinions of many of the early settlers of the state should not be disregarded, for such men, although in many cases having but little scientific knowledge of geology and botany, are remarkable for their deep insight into the visible workings of nature.

The various prairies in different parts of the earth have originated, most likely, through various causes. It would, then, be wrong to attribute the origin of all to the supposed causes which led to the origin of some special prairie. Illinois prairies, it may be, had an origin entirely different from that of the prairies in the western part of the United States.

One of the first theories, and one that is still held by many, is that our prairies here were produced by fire. It is certain that at an early day great fires swept over this state. Ofttimes, within the remembrance of some of the early settlers here, portions of forests have been entirely burnt down. In course of time these settlers have seen the prairie grass take complete possession of the ground where great trees had stood.

Gov. Reynolds said: "Many learned essays are written on the origin of the prairies, but any attentive observer will come to the conclusion that it is fire burning the strong, high grass that caused the prairies." He further said, in speaking of the forests of southern Illinois: "I have witnessed the growth of the forests in the southern counties, and know there is more timber in them now than there was forty or fifty years before. The obvious reason is that the fire is kept out. This is likewise the reason the prairies are generally the most fertile soil. The vegetation in them was the strongest, and the fires there burnt with the most power." "It will be seen that the timber in the north part of the state is found only on the margins of streams and other places where the prairie fires could not reach it."

A later opinion, and one that is held by some of the best geologists in the United States, is that the prairies were formed by water rather than by fire. Judge Caton says: "That the prairies,—that is, the land itself,—have been formed under water, except the very limited portion of the surface which has been added from decomposed animal and vegetable matter since their emergence, will not be questioned by anyone of the least observation; but that is not the main question involved in the present inquiry. Why are they not covered with forests?"

Judge Caton agrees, in general, with Prof. Lesquereaux, who prepared a paper for the Geological Survey of Illinois, and thinks that the prairies were formed under water. He, however, disagrees with the Professor in the particular process of formation under water; and the fact that the elements of the soil of the prairies are such that are not conducive to forest growth. The Judge further says: "I entirely concur in the popular opinion that among the most important of the causes which have produced this interesting result is fire, while the exhaustion and replenishing the soil with their particular elements have, no doubt, had their influence." "The hard, impenetrable character of the sward, formed by most of the herbaceous vegetation of the prairies, forms a serious impediment to the germination of seeds of trees, when, by accident, they fall upon it. It is not the composition of the soil that prevents the germination of this class of seeds, but whatever difficulty is experienced in this regard arises from the mechanical cause above suggested." "The cause of the absence of trees on the upland prairies is the problem most important to the agricultural interests of our state, and it is the inquiry which alone I propose to consider, but I cannot resist the remark that wherever we do find timber throughout this broad field of prairie it is always in or near the humid portions of it,—as along the margins of streams, or upon or near the springy uplands." "If the head-waters of streams on the prairies are most frequently without timber, so soon as they have attained sufficient volume to impede the progress of the fires, with very few exceptions, we find forests on their borders becoming broader and more vigorous as the magnitude of the streams increases." "Another fact, always a subject of remark among the dwellers on the prairie, I regard as conclusive evidence that the prairie soils are peculiarly adapted to the growth of trees is, that wherever the fires have been kept from the groves by the settlers, they have encroached upon the prairies, unless closely depastured by the farmer's stock or prevented by cultivation. This fact I regard as established by careful observation of more than thirty years, during which time I have been an interested witness of the settlement of this country,—from a time when a few log cabins, many miles apart, built in the borders of the groves, alone were met with, till now nearly the whole of the great prairies, in our state at least, are brought under cultivation by the industry of the husbandmen. Indeed, this is a fact as well recognized by settlers as that corn will grow upon the prairies when properly cultivated. Ten years ago I heard the observation made, by intelligent and observing men, that within the preceding twenty-five years the area of the timber in the prairie portions of the state had actually doubled by the spontaneous extension of natural groves. However this may be, certain it is that the encroachments of the timber upon the prairie have been universal and rapid, whenever not impeded by fire or other physical causes, without regard to the constituents of the soil."

Hon. J. D. Caton's article on the origin of the prairies delivered before the Chicago Historical Society, is so to the point that we have quoted quite extensively from it.

Mr. H. W. Beckwith says, in the conclusion of his article on the subject in his "Historic Notes of the Northwest": "The prairies of Illinois and Indiana were born of water and preserved by fire for the children of civilized men who have come to take possession of them."

CHAPTER III

THE MOUND BUILDERS.

WHO were they? What were they? Whence came they? What became of them? These are questions which the civilized world has for nearly four centuries been trying to answer. Although some of the best minds of the world have been at work for years trying to solve the mystery connected with these people, still their conclusions are but conjectures. The astonishment of the Europeans when first they knew that the New World was peopled with a race different from any before known, was more than equaled by that produced when, many years later, it became known that a race was here long previous to Indian habitation. Antiquarians say, now, that the Europeans are the fourth race to people America.

Evidence in regard to the early races was not obtained from the Indians. Their earliest traditions told nothing of the builders of the wonderful and magnificent cities, the remains of which are found in various parts of Mexico and Central America. Neither could anything be obtained from them in regard to the earthworks of the United States, which are so numerous in places, and are scattered all the way from the southern shore of Lake Ontario southwesterly to Mexico. The original inhabitants of this great country passed out of existence leaving almost nothing for the later inhabitants to know of them save what is inherent in the grand and oftentimes magnificent ruins scattered from the Great Lakes to the Andean Plateau.

The inhabitants of Mexico and Peru at the time of the Spanish conquest had some traditions relating to their predecessors, but all were of so conflicting a nature that but very little could be obtained from them. Aztec traditions indicate that Mexico was once occupied by a savage people, supposed to be the first owners of the land. These savages were displaced by a more civilized race which came in ships. This people was, in turn, conquered by another civilized people, who united with the former inhabitants. Allowing that there may be truth in these traditions, it has been suggested that the original mound-builders were a branch or colony of the second of the races which emigrated to Mexico, and that they finally were attracted to the warmer climates, where they conquered and united with the people already there. These three peoples probably furnished the curious and magnificent structures the ruins of which have been objects of wonderment for so many modern minds.

The great number and magnitude of the ruins in Mexico, Central America, and South America, show that these countries were once quite densely populated. The time of the building and occupation of the cities now in such utter ruin and desolation is almost beyond conjecture. From the present crumbling condition of the once massive stone structures, it would seem that, in point of time, they long antedate the Egyptian and other noted ruins of the Old World. Judging from their art displayed in various utensils, and in the construction of the magnificent edifices, the inhabitants of ancient Mexico and Central America were much more civilized than those of the United States.

The great number and massiveness of the earthworks found in the United States are no less a matter of speculation than are the more artistic ruins found farther south. These earthworks are of divers shapes, and were evidently designed for various purposes. Some of them are ruins of forts; of these some are rectangular, others are square; some are protected by outer embankments, while almost all are surrounded by ditches. Ohio, probably, contains the greater number and the most interesting forts. On the banks of the Saline river, in Illinois, there was found the remains of a stone fort having walls four or five feet high. The remains of a walled town was found on Paint creek in Ohio.

Mounds of various sizes have been found in many of the states. In many instances these mounds seem to have been originally intended for burial-places. In general, these earthen tombs were for single families or persons, the size of the mound indicating the rank held by the persons while living. The Indians used some of these mounds for burial-places, which accounts for the many skeletons sometimes found in them. Illinois has the honor of containing the largest mound in the United States. It is called the Cahokia Mound, and is about six miles northeast of St. Louis. This mound was, ere modern improvement marred its shape and diminished its size, in the shape of a parallelogram, having sides seven hundred and five hundred feet respectively in length. Its height was ninety feet. A large terrace on the southwest was reached by a winding road. The summit was truncated, and in the middle of the large platform thus formed was a conical mound about ten feet high. This mound contained human bones, as well as the remains of various articles and utensils. The most probable supposition is that a temple of wood, or other perishable material, originally stood on this mound. Here high priests performed religious rites, which were witnessed by multitudes of people from below.*

Illinois contains a great number of smaller mounds. These are often arranged in groups. Mr. Foster, in his "Prehistoric Races," mentions a group of fifty-nine mounds found on the banks of the Merom river. Some of the earthworks assume the shape of gigantic animals. Adams county, Ohio, contains a mound in the shape of a monstrous serpent one thousand feet in length. Northern Illinois and Wisconsin contain the majority of these animal mounds.

It is supposed that the mound-builders were sun-worshippers. This conclusion was deduced from various facts. The finding of mounds, such as that at Cahokia, which were evidently used as the bases for temples; the placing of the dead with their heads toward the east, the openings of tombs and forts being toward the east, and finally the finding of rude carvings representing the sun,—all lead to the conclusion that the mound-builders were sun-worshippers.

What remains that have been found of this curious people show that in civilization they were far in advance of the Indians. They mined and quarried stone; they were acquainted with the curative properties of salt; they had a national religion, and they built a great line of defense for protection from their enemies. The great size and number of their works showed that the government must have been such that the many were ruled absolutely by the few. No similarity can be found between this government and that of the Indians. There is certainly a similarity between the works of the mound-builders and those of the ancient inhabitants of Mexico. It is Dr. Foster's opinion that the mound-builders were expelled from the Mississippi valley by a barbarous race, and that refuge was taken in and about Central America, where their civilization became more complete. They thus left behind them the magnificent edifices the ruins of which have elicited the admiration of so many.

Quite an excellent proof of the antiquity of the mound-builders was evinced when a comparison was made between the bodies found in the earthworks and some of those found in the Old World having a known time of burial. Considering the unfavorable conditions for preservation of the latter as compared with the favorable conditions of the former, the condition of the bodies when found in works of the mound-builders show a much longer interment. The conclusion is arrived at that the mound-builders were here at least two thousand years ago.

Now, when these massive stone and earthen works have silently and majestically borne down to us, through the long vistas of centuries, the undeniable fact that this was, in reality, a sister land to that of the most ancient Romans, Greeks and Egyptians, we pause in awful wonderment. It is with a feeling akin to reverence that we think of the beings who were here such ages and ages ago.

CHAPTER IV.

THE FRENCH IN ILLINOIS.

IN 1534, seven years before De Soto discovered the Mississippi river, Jacques Cartier, a French explorer, discovered the gulf and river St. Lawrence. The name was given to the gulf the next year, at the close of Cartier's second voyage. Cartier's discoveries were soon made known, and France immediately attempted to execute a plan for the colonization of New France, as Canada was first called. Various attempts were made, but all proved failures. For a time, while France was employed with domestic troubles, no attempts at colonization were made. It was not, therefore, until 1608, when France had peace at home, that the first permanent settlement was made in Canada. In this year Quebec was founded by Samuel Champlain. In writing of Champlain, Mr. Ridpath says that to him "more than to any other man,—more than to the French government itself,—the success of the North American colonies of France must be attributed."

Champlain, upon his return in 1615 from a visit to France, brought with him some Recollet monks, who came actuated solely by religious motives. After establishing many missions, they found their field of labor too great for so few laborers, and the Jesuits of France were appealed to. They came, actuated by the same religious zeal that the Recollet monks possessed. Illinois, and in fact all the great Northwest, owes not a little to the pure lives and deep religious bearing of the French missionaries.

Nicholas Perrot was the first European to tread the soil of Illinois. Over two hundred years ago, in 1670,* he was sent as an agent of the Canadian government to call a meeting of the western Indians at St. Mary's. This peace convention was a movement preparatory to what finally led to the discovery of the Mississippi river. Perrot, after visiting other tribes in the Northwest, proceeded to the village of the Miamas, at what is now Chicago. Illinois did well to rear her greatest city where her earliest European visitor placed first his foot upon her yielding soil.

In 1672* two Jesuit ministers, Alloüez and Dablon, starting from their mission on Green Bay, passed through the northern part of Illinois to visit the Fox, Masquotine and Kickapoo Indians.

Not yet was the idea of the western passage to the Pacific given up.

* Bancroft.

M. Talon, the intendant of Canada, selected Louis Joliet and Jacques Marquette to assist in unvailing the great mystery. Before definite arrangements for the expedition were made, the intendant and governor were succeeded by other men. The new governor, Count Frontenac, upon the recommendation of Talon, placed Joliet and Marquette in charge of the western expedition.

Joliet was a native of Quebec, and was born in 1645. He was energetic, had a good education, and was well qualified for the task before him. He had been educated for a priest, but he found his life-work in another direction. For some time previous to his appointment with Marquette he had been a trader among the Indians. After his voyage with Marquette he did further service for the king. As a reward for all of his services he received the island of Anticosti. He, after this, caused his name to be written Joliet d'Anticosty. Some of his descendants are still living in Canada, and are yet in possession of his seigniory.*

Marquette was the greater man of the two. He was born at Laon, France, in 1637. He united with the Jesuits at an early age, and in 1666 was sent to America. On account of his wonderful determination and integrity, his kindness and his deep religious feeling, he became the most beloved and most successful of all the Indian missionaries.

Joliet joined Marquette at Mackinaw. Marquette said in speaking of their appointment, "Our joy at being chosen for this expedition roused our courage and sweetened the labor of rowing from morning to night." From Mackinaw Strait, in company with several other Frenchmen, these men started May 17, 1673, on their renowned expedition. Green Bay was reached, and on the Fox river an Indian village was found. After stating their mission to the wondering Algonquins, and after obtaining two Indian guides, the voyagers proceeded up the Fox river and across the Portage, when the Wisconsin river was reached. The guides returned leaving the Frenchmen "alone in an unknown country in the hands of Providence." "France and Christianity stood in the valley of the Mississippi." † Passing down the Wisconsin river, in all its early June beauty, the voyagers reached the Great River on the 17th of June 1673. With untold joy they looked upon the mighty water. With thrilling hearts they eagerly entered the swift current and "the two birch-bark canoes, raising their happy sails under new skies and to unknown breezes, floated down the calm magnificence of the ocean stream." †

* H. W. Beckwith's "Historic Notes of the Northwest."

† Bancroft.

About sixty leagues below the mouth of the Wisconsin a little foot-path was seen leading westward from the river. Joliet and Marquette, the first white men in Iowa, went alone in search of the Indians. After going six or eight miles they found, on the banks of the Des Moines river, some Illinois Indians, who received them kindly. An aged chief addressed them thus: "How beautiful is the sun, O Frenchmen, when thou comest to visit us! All our town awaits thee, and thou shalt enter all our cabins in peace." After six days' delay Marquette and Joliet, escorted by many of the savages, returned to their canoes. As the voyagers journeyed on down the river each day's travel brought new beauties to their view, and ere long the mouth of the Illinois river was reached. The muddy waters of the Missouri soon furnished to them a new object of wonderment. After passing the mouth of the Ohio, and upon nearing the mouth of the Arkansas, they were convinced that the waters of the Mississippi did not reach the Pacific ocean. They therefore decided to return.

Indians had been encountered at various places during the downward voyage. The return voyage was begun in the heat of July. Upon reaching the mouth of the Illinois river the Indians persuaded the travelers to follow up that river, thus finding an easier trip to Green Bay. While moving rapidly against the gentle current of the Illinois river, Marquette, though suffering from an illness contracted in the south, found ready enjoyment in the magnificent scenery which was continually being presented to their view. The blossoming flowers, the bounding deer, the roaming buffalo, all added to the interest of the scene before them. As they passed up the river, almost reluctantly their lingering eyes left the beauties in their rear, yet with eagerness they anticipated what was before them.

Upon arriving at Kaskaskia, a town of the Illinois Indians on the present site of the town of Utica in La Salle county, they procured guides and the party soon reached Chicago. From thence they journeyed on to Green Bay. Upon reaching this place Marquette decided to remain at his mission while Joliet went with accounts of their discoveries to Quebec.

After nearly a year spent in trying to regain his health, Marquette started on what proved to be his last missionary expedition. In October, 1674, he started, with two Frenchmen and some Indians, to Kaskaskia, where he proposed to found a mission. His malady returned upon his reaching Chicago, and the winter was spent in a hut on the banks of the river. The following March he continued his journey to Kaskaskia, and the first Jesuit mission was founded in Illinois. The Indians took regretful leave of the good man when he started for Mackinaw, which he hoped to reach ere his death. But it was not thus to be. On the 19th of May he was obliged to pause in his journey. His companions built a hut for him on the banks of the stream which bears his name. Here, in America's great wilderness, where he had ever loved to tell of his unshaken faith, Marquette's spirit passed upward to his Maker.

After Champlain, Robert Cavalier de La Salle was the next great French explorer to leave the "vine-clad hills of sunny France" and brave the trials and misfortunes in the New World. Robert de La Salle was the son of a wealthy burgher in Rouen, and was born in 1643. He was deprived of his patrimony by his early connections with the Jesuits. Finding his sphere somewhat limited, he made an honorable withdrawal from the Jesuits and followed his brother, a St. Sulpitian priest, to America. While preparing for the settlement of the grant of land which was presented to him, he became acquainted with nine different Indian languages and dialects.

Upon hearing of the Ohio river from Seneca Indians, La Salle resolved to attempt to discover the Western Passage to Asia. Although he failed to obtain help from the government, he was not to be baffled in his desire. He sold his grant of land and thus prepared for his expedition. A missionary expedition, which the Seminary was preparing for the northwest, was merged into La Salle's expedition, and in July, 1669, the explorers began their journey. The missionary part of this expedition proved a failure. La Salle, however, amid perplexing trials, won for himself an everlasting crown of glory,—won the honor of discovering the Ohio river.

After returning to France, La Salle came back to America with renewed energy and additional means for carrying on his pet project. In 1679 a vessel, the Griffin, was constructed on the Niagara river, and was destined for an expedition on the Great Lakes. La Salle, in company with Tonti, Hennepin and others, embarked in the vessel in August 1679. Green Bay was reached, and the fated Griffin was sent toward Canada, while La Salle with his remaining men started in canoes to the St. Joseph river. Upon the completion of Fort Miama, on the St. Joseph river, La Salle continued his journey, and sought to find the Illinois river. Before the end of December, La Salle, Tonti and Hennepin, with two other men, glided joyfully down the Illinois river and soon reached the Indian village of Kaskaskia. The six hundred cabins were deserted, and La Salle, after helping himself to some stored corn, passed on down the river. They soon entered Lake Peoria, and at its lower extremity the friendly Illinois Indians were found.

Notwithstanding the friendship of the Indians dark days were ahead for La Salle. He already feared the loss of the Griffin, and, too, his men became discontented. When La Salle planned and began to build a fort on the banks of the Illinois river, below the Peoria lake, thwarted by destiny and almost despairing he named the fort "Creve-cœur," or the "Broken Heart."

These trials afforded but another opportunity for La Salle to show forth his great determination and will power. His men were led to construct a bark on the Illinois river. Hennepin was sent on an expedition to the upper Mississippi; Tonti was left in charge of Fort Creve-cœur, while La Salle, with but three companions, started on foot for Fort Frontenac, in Canada. On his way up the river La Salle visited the Illinois Indians, who had returned to Kaskaskia. While here he explored the elevation since known as Starved Rock. This rock is near one hundred and fifty feet in height, and is situated on the south bank of the Illinois river, about one and one half miles from the present town of Utica. La Salle, pleased with the rock, afterward sent word to Tonti to fortify it. After this short pause, La Salle continued his journey toward Canada. He reached his destination safely after a long and perilous journey.

Notwithstanding the loss of the Griffin, the receiving of a discouraging letter from Tonti at Fort Creve-cœur, and the hearing of the destruction of Fort St. Joseph, still La Salle was not dismayed. He obtained necessary supplies, and with twenty-five men returned to Illinois. Upon reaching Kaskaskia they found it deserted. The houses were burned, and buzzards feasted on the fetid remains of the slaughtered Indians. The dreaded Iriquois had evidently made their threatened invasion. After searching in vain for Tonti, La Salle went on down the river. The deserted and partially destroyed Fort Creve-cœur was found—but no Tonti. La Salle sadly continued his course to the Mississippi river, when, in despair of finding the missing ones, he resolved to return to Fort Miama.

Tonti, in the meantime, after the desertion of some of his men, had found refuge with the Indians at Kaskaskia. Here he remained until the arrival of the Iriquois. Previous to the open attack, Tonti had worked hard on both sides endeavoring to obtain peace. He had risked his life in vain, and finally, being distrusted by the Indians, he started with what remained of his company for Green Bay.

La Salle next conceived and executed the plan of getting the Illinois and Miama Indians to unite for defense against the Iriquois. He started again for Canada, and on his way met Tonti at Mackinaw.

Upon reaching Canada another expedition was fitted out for the valley of the Mississippi. This party reached the Mississippi on the 6th of February 1682. On the 6th of April the Great Gulf was before them, and on the 9th of April, 1682, La Salle, in the name of Louis XIV of France, took possession of the Mississippi valley. The anticipated goal was reached, and the travelers made preparations for returning to Mackinaw.

From Mackinaw La Salle expected to go to France, but hearing of the Indian troubles in Illinois he returned and built Fort St. Louis on Starved Rock. La Salle next went to Canada, leaving Tonti in charge of Fort St. Louis. From Canada he went to France to fit up an expedition via the Gulf of Mexico to the Mississippi valley. He succeeded in starting from France with four ships and two hundred and eighty men. Unfortunately the mouth of the Mississippi was passed, and the party landed at Matagorda bay. A fort was built here, and named St. Louis, in honor of the king.

La Salle, failing to find either gold or the Mississippi river, started with twenty men overland toward Canada. His men were dissatisfied, and finally in one of their quarrels La Salle's nephew was killed. While seeking for his nephew La Salle was shot by one of his men. Such was the death of this bold adventurer.

"For force of will and vast conceptions; for various knowledge and quick adoption of genius to untried circumstances; for a sublime magnanimity that resigned itself to the will of heaven, and yet triumphed over affliction by energy of purpose and unfaltering hopes, he had no superior among his countrymen." *

De Soto discovered the lower Mississippi, and Joliet and Marquette discovered the upper part of the river; but to La Salle will be yielded the honor of starting colonization in the great central valley of the west.

CHAPTER V.

INDIANS IN ILLINOIS.

“Alas! for them—their day is o’er,
Their fires are out from hill to shore;
No more for them the wild deer bounds;
The plough is on their hunting grounds;
The pale man’s axe rings through their woods;
The pale man’s sail skims o’er their floods;
Their pleasant springs are dry;
Their children—look! by power oppressed,
Beyond the mountains of the west

CHAS. SPRAGUE.

THE present Indians of the United States constitute, it is supposed, the third distinct race which has inhabited North America. Their origin is still but a matter of conjecture. The most common supposition, however, is that they sprang from some of the early peoples of Asia. According to Indian tradition they came from the northwest. Their “happy hunting grounds” were always toward the west. The Algonquin and Iroquois branches of the American Indians are the only ones which played a conspicuous part in Illinois history.

The principal part of the Iroquois country was in what is now the State of New York. The five principal tribes of the Iroquois—the Mohawks, Oneidas, Onondagas, Cayugas and Senecas—constituted the famous Five Nations of New York. It has been considered by some that these nations showed the Indian in his most favorable aspect—that the Iroquois Indian was the bravest, most patriotic and most eloquent of all the Indians. A later opinion, however, is that the Algonquins, from the same latitude, were fully their equals in courage, patriotism and eloquence.

The territory of the Algonquin Indians completely surrounded that of the Iroquois, and extended far to the north, south and west. The Algonquins were on the St. Lawrence at the time of the French discoveries there; they were found as far south as South Carolina, and Marquette and La Salle found them in the Mississippi valley. The Algonquins embraced the Ottawas, Chippewas, Pottawatomes, Sacs and Foxes, Kickapoos, Illinois, and several other tribes. The majority of the Indians who made Illinois their home belonged to the Illinois tribe.

ILLINOIS INDIANS.

The word Illinois is derived from Illini, an Indian term meaning "real or superior men." The French have left their impress upon our state by giving to its name a French termination.

Originally the Illinois confederacy was composed of four tribes, the Kaskaskias, Cahokias, Tamaroas and Peorias. Not a great while previous to the appearance of the French in the west, a foreign tribe, the Michigamies, were taken into the confederacy.

Previous to the discovery of the upper Mississippi by Marquette the Illinois Indians had been driven west of that river by the Iroquois. They afterward returned to their former home, and when Marquette and Joliet passed up the Illinois river they found some of their tribe near the present town of Utica, on the Illinois river. After the repulsion of the Illinois tribe by the Iroquois the former Indians were in constant fear of renewed attacks; and they had ground for fear, for in 1680 the Iroquois again made their appearance.

Consternation and fear were depicted in the countenance of every inhabitant of the Kaskaskia village when a Shawnee Indian, after starting for home, hurried back with the news of the invaders' arrival. With hurried preparations for war the Illinois crossed the river and barely reached the plain beyond when the Iroquois emerged in vast numbers from the woods of the Vermilion river. Some shots were discharged on both sides, but a partial treaty of peace was made and the Iroquois reserved their attack until later, when they plundered the village and pursued the Illinois down the river. Near the mouth of the Illinois river seven hundred women and children of the Tamaroas were taken prisoner. Throughout the entire attack the butcheries were fearful; men, women and children were unmercifully slaughtered. After the appeasing of their fiendish thirst the Iroquois retired from their field of conquest and the remaining Illinois returned to their desolated homes.

The Iroquois were great warriors, could not remain idle, pretended to subject all other nations to themselves, and never wanted a pretext for commencing hostilities. They, however, were not always successful in their campaign into the Illinois country, and into other parts of the west. According to tradition, four hundred Iroquois were defeated at the mouth of Des Moines river by three hundred Sioux. Again, on the banks of the Illinois river, some Illinois Indians, at the instigation of an Indian maiden,* returned after a partial defeat and completely routed the Iroquois.

The founding at the Kaskaskia village of the earliest Jesuit mission in Illinois has already been alluded to. This mission, founded in 1675, was removed by Father Gravier to Kaskaskia, in southwestern Illinois, some time previous to 1690. Kaskaskia, the oldest town in Illinois, was the last abiding place of the Illinois Indians within the limits of the state.

Although the Illinois Indians were considered cowardly, treacherous and deceitful, yet the French never had any more faithful allies. Charlevoix, in the "History of New France," said of them: "If we except the Abenaki tribes, they are the only tribe that never sought peace with their enemies to our prejudice."

In 1684 there were twelve hundred Illinois warriors in their single village at La Salle's colony, at Fort St. Louis, on the Illinois river. These Indians assisted the French in many instances. They assisted in the Chickasaw war, and fought against the Natchez Indians in 1729. They became involved in Pontiac's great conspiracy, but they had seemingly lost much of their old thirst for warfare; and as they did not show the zeal which Pontiac expected they would, he threatened them severely. In 1767,† when Pontiac lost his life in the Illinois country, the other nations that had answered to Pontiac's mighty word of command sought revenge upon the Illinois confederacy. During this persecution, shortly after the death of Pontiac, occurred the siege of Starved Rock. Tradition says that a war party of the Illinois sought refuge at the old Fort St. Louis, on Le Rocher, as the French called it. Their enemies besieged these warriors until, when near starving, they grew desperate. One dismal, stormy night they attempted to escape, but they were soon overpowered by their blood-thirsty enemies. It is said, however, that a few escaped down the river and joined the remaining Illinois Indians near Kaskaskia. Hence the name, Starved Rock, by which this rocky promontory is known at the present time. In 1794 the Illinois Indians were defeated in a war against the United States. A treaty of peace was made and an annuity was granted them. They made several moves after this, selling their land as they left. According to a letter of Gen. Harrison's, written in 1814, the Illinois confederacy was reduced, in 1800, to but thirty warriors, while in 1745 their warriors numbered four thousand. By various treaties their lands were ceded to the United States. They were moved west of the Missouri, and in 1854 were in eastern Kansas. In 1867 they moved farther west. There remained, in 1872, but forty persons, men, women and children, of the once great and powerful Illinois confederacy.

According to the accounts given by some of the early French missionaries, the Illinois Indians originally possessed their full share, probably more than their full share, of Indian vices. Upon the arrival of the French missionaries they were warmly welcomed by the Illinois, and soon christianity had "produced a change such as she alone can produce in morals and disposition." In the use of the bow and arrow they were more skillful than any of the surrounding tribes. They were tall and graceful, and were noted for being swift of foot.

Previous to the coming of the Iroquois the Illinois Indians had lived on the banks of the Illinois river in primitive contentedness. Long before Perrot reached Illinois these Indians had lived, fought, loved and worshiped in the beautiful valley of the river which bears their name. Their swift arrows pierced the hearts of scores of timid bounding deer. The buffalo, in all his mightiness, fell to the ground no less surely than did the deer when the Illinois bow was raised. They hunted that they might live. They lived in great simplicity, but with a kindness to relatives and a royal hospitality to friends and strangers, that some of their pale-faced successors would do well to imitate. They fought in defense of kindred and homes, and for their dead. Cupid's arrow was no less potent then than now. Triumphantly the "persistent god" started the mystic dart that pierced with all surety the hearts of dusky youths and maidens. And here on this broad rolling prairie, or in the midst of the great forest, which Marquette said was the Indian's paradise, these Indians thought ever of the Great Spirit — their God.

SACS AND FOXES.

These tribes originally lived on the banks of the St. Lawrence river; but hostile tribes drove them westward, and they fought their way separately to the vicinity of Green Bay. Here, for mutual protection, these tribes made an alliance which has never been broken. The Jesuit Allouez found them near Green Bay as early as 1669 or 1672. He was at first received by them with contempt, but with Jesuitic patience he labored and finally succeeded in gaining their confidence and friendship. When Marquette, several years afterward, passed through this region he beheld with joy the cross which had been erected at Allouez's instigation.

The combined tribes continued their warlike machinations when they moved to northern Illinois, and while residing there formed alliances with other nations, and for years harassed the Illinois Indians on their river and ultimately helped to drive this tribe southward. They warred frequently against the French, and aided the British against the Americans as late as 1812. They made several cessions of land to the United States, and in 1830 that cession was made which led to the Black Hawk war. After this war these tribes went to their lands in Iowa. They were afterward removed to the Indian Territory. From the year 1825 to that of 1850 these tribes had suffered a decrease in numbers of some 3,000 souls.

THE KICKAPOOS.

In 1672* Allouez found the Kickapoos on the Milwaukee river. In 1763 they were situated in the country around the southwestern shore of Lake Michigan. They afterward moved farther south; and still later, at the time of the first settlements in Piatt county they lived in the vicinity of the Sangamon river, and had a village on Kickapoo creek, at Elkhart Grove, and at several places in eastern Illinois.

It is said that the Kickapoos were somewhat more civilized than the surrounding tribes; but be that as it may, in warfare, at least, they were barbarous. They were very bitter in their hatred of the Illinois Indians, and for near a century did their share in helping to exterminate that powerful tribe. The Kickapoos reaped their coveted reward, for they afterward occupied a portion of the coveted Illinois hunting-grounds. They gained possession of this ground shortly after the war which followed Pontiac's death, and were not content to let the Illinois Indians alone after their retreat to the southern part of the state. The Kickapoos, in general, had a deep feeling of animosity toward the whites. They, in connection with several other tribes, did so much damage by murdering and stealing during the war of 1812 that Gov. Edwards was necessitated to suppress them by military force.

* Bancroft.

After their submission annuities were granted them. Some emigrated to Mexico, where they still showed their hatred to the whites by making inroads over the border.

THE POTTAWATOMIES.

The French found this tribe lying just east of the southern part of Lake Michigan, and the Jesuits founded a mission among these Indians on the St. Joseph river. The Iroquois had been instrumental in driving this tribe westward. A portion located as above mentioned, while some went farther north.

These Indians were ferocious, and long had strong hatred toward the English and Americans. They were friendly toward the French and assisted them in some of their battles. In Pontiac's war they were strongly allied to him. They were merciless, and often disguised their evil intentions under the garb of friendship. By thus doing they massacred almost the entire garrison of a military post on the St. Joseph river. These Indians, in conjunction with parts of the Ottawa and Chippewa tribes, were very ferocious and vindictive in the wars which marked the advancement of the whites toward the west. In the destruction of life they were the most daring, cruel and fiendish. Pontiac did well when he gained them as co-workers in his great satanic scheme of cruelty and bloodshed.

In 1812, under British influence, the Pottawatomies enacted at Fort Dearborn* one of the most merciless crimes that human beings have ever perpetrated. Fort Dearborn was built and garrisoned in 1804. The traders who came from time to time to this place managed to keep up a friendly feeling with the Indians. In 1812, during the English and American war, word was sent for the garrison at this fort to evacuate. Captain Heald, commander of the garrison, made known, in council with the Indians the intended evacuation. Signs of hostility were observed among the Indians, but all fears were mostly quieted upon the arrival of Captain Wells with some Miami Indians from Fort Wayne. Early on the morning of August 15—the fatal day—Mr. Kinzie, one of the principal traders at the post, received word from a friendly Indian that mischief was on foot. At nine o'clock the party, escorted by Captain Wells and 500 Pottawatomies, left the fort to the sound of martial music. Notwithstanding the Pottawatomies had pledged their honor to see the party safe to Fort Wayne, before they were beyond the present limits of Chicago these treacherous fiends made a terrible attack upon the whites, sparing neither men, women nor children. The American troops fought bravely, and until over half were killed, before a surrender was made. The Indians soon had control of the wagons and baggage, and the helpless were massacred without mercy. The most fearful of all these dread deeds was that performed by a single young savage who climbed into a wagon and with his tomahawk dispatched twelve innocent children. Captain Wells, then a prisoner, upon witnessing this scene, exclaimed: "If this be your game, I can kill too," and he started toward the Pottawatomie camp. But he soon became a prisoner again, and although some friendly chiefs tried to save him, a Pottawatomie rode up in the rear and killed him by a single blow. This man's heart was cut to pieces and distributed among the Indians for a token of bravery. Wells street in Chicago perpetuates the name of this brave man. During all this terrible scene Mr. Kinzie's family were guarded by friendly Indians near the fort. The prisoners taken by the Indians were widely distributed to various tribes in Illinois and Wisconsin. The majority were ransomed at Detroit the next year, while some were detained a year longer.

The Pottawatomies also took part in the outbreak against the Illinois Indians, and were benefited by the removal of the latter from their cherished land. They were finally removed from Illinois. They found their way to the Indian Territory, and in 1850 the Pottawatomies only numbered about 1500 persons.

SHABBONA.

Shabbona was a peace chief of the Pottawatomies, and was born near the Maumee river, in Ohio, in 1775.* His commanding physical structure, as well as the noble attributes of his mind, caused him to be respected by Indian as well as by white man. He was a companion of Tecumseh in the war of 1812, and was fighting by his side when the great brave fell, in 1813, at the battle of the Thames. Upon the death of his wife's father he became a chief of the Pottawatomies. After the war of 1812 he was always a friend of the Americans. The whites owe this Indian an everlasting debt of gratitude for the prompt action in favor of the whites taken by him during the Black Hawk trouble. Black Hawk endeavored to gain Shabbona's assistance in his war, telling him, as an argument, that if they united their tribes they would be in numbers as the trees of the forest. Shabbona replied, "Yes, and the army of the palefaces you will have to encounter will be as numerous as the leaves on those trees." After finding that war must come Shabbona traveled night and day that he might save the frontier white settlers. Had the white settlers of Indian Creek heeded Shabbona's words of warning, that fearful massacre might have been averted. Many of the people of La Salle county owed the preservation of their lives to this old peace Indian. For the services rendered by Shabbona to the whites the government reserved a portion of land at Shabbona's Grove, in what is now De Kalb county, and presented him with a pension of $200.

* Lecture before the Chicago Historical Society, by Mr. Wm. Hickling.

When his tribe moved to the Pottawatomie reservation, west of the Mississippi, Shabbona went also, but he, with his family, returned to his individual reservation. He again went west, but after one of his sons was killed he returned to Illinois, in 1855. Supposing that Shabbona had deserted his reservation, some speculators sold his land during his absence. Upon his return Shabbona was hurt by this act, and sorrowfully said, "Shabbona has nothing now." The citizens of Ottawa raised by subscription a sufficient amount of money to purchase twenty acres of land in Grundy county, upon which Shabbona and his family lived until his death, in 1859. His wife, who weighed 400 pounds, was drowned in Mazon creek, six years after her husband's death.

Let those who would ruthlessly push the Indians to the very verge of our continent pause and remember Shabbona. His life shows what nobleness there can be in the Indian's character. He is a striking example of the people who hate their enemies and love their friends with all their soul. It may be said of him, however, that while his friendship was of the strongest, his hatred was not so bitter nor so lasting as that of some of his people.

ILLINOIS IN PONTIAC'S CONSPIRACY.

Pontiac was born in 1712. His native tribe has long been a matter of controversy, as several tribes have claimed him. The most favorable opinion at present, however, is that he belongs to the Sac tribe. He closely resembled these Indians, and it was the first to answer his call against the whites. It is well known that he was a chief of the Ottawas, but that probably was because of their being greater warriors.

Pontiac was first known as an ally of the French. After the fall of Quebec, in 1759, the long war between France and England was at an end, and Pontiac was too politic to adhere to the cause of the vanquished, so he made friends with the English upon their taking possession of the French posts. It was when Maj. Robert Rogers was sent to take possession of the frontier French posts that the great Pontiac appeared first upon the scene. After passing Fort Niagara the major landed at the farthest point west the English troops had been. Soon after their landing Indians made their appearance, evidently to design the purpose of the whites. 'Twas then that Rogers first saw Pontiac, who addressed the whites in rather an arrogant style and seemed disposed to prevent their continuance to Detroit. But the next morning the sagacious, politic Pontiac reappeared, offered the peace pipe and designated his desire to live in peace with the English. The party proceeded, and, owing to Pontiac's influence among the hostile tribes, reached Detroit safely. The French commander was evidently incensed at the appearance of Rogers, but nevertheless the French garrison filed out of the fort, laid down their arms and gave place to the English. The Indians who witnessed the transfer could not understand how a few English could take the place of the French garrison. When all was explained to them their opinion of the English began to be exalted, but still they could not understand why the lives of the conquered French were not taken. Pontiac expected all the deference from the English that the French had been wont to pay him, and the English not bestowing this deference, had not been long in the possession of the country ere an awful cloud began to hover in their horizon. The Indians, instigated somewhat by the French, began to nourish a silent, fearful hate of the English. Pontiac's mind had not been inactive while these feelings were being aroused among the other Indians. He began to realize what English supremacy meant, and he resolved to resist with an awful strength their advancement, and if possible to "drive the red* dogs into the sea."

By his own power, and with the assistance of the French, Pontiac became the leader of at least fifteen Indian nations. His messengers had been sent near and far until a mighty war cloud was close upon the unsuspecting English.

Pontiac's plot was to attack all the English posts on the same day and, after gaining possession, to kill all the English — men, women and children. Illinois, being still under the French flag, was the rendezvous for both French and Indians, and the origin of the great scheme might be traced there. The principal scene of action, however, was east of Illinois, up and about Detroit. Although the plot came near being discovered, the great day soon arrived.

Through artifice nine British posts were captured. In some cases the garrison was completely surprised. Again the officers were secured while the Indians were pretending to transact business with them. A squaw betrayed the officer at Maumee by enlisting his sympathies with a dying man outside the fort. At Michillimackinac—opposite the present Mackinaw Strait—the Indians played a game of ball in honor of the king's birthday, and the officers and soldiers of the garrison were artfully tempted to witness the scene, some even engaged in betting for the winners. The ball was finally artfully tossed over the pickets of the fort, and the reckless tumultuous crowd followed it. Then came the terrible war-whoop, and before the English could scarcely think the fort was in the hands of the Indians.

The formidable Detroit post had been left for Pontiac to gain the glory of its victory. But he was to reap disappointment. A pretty Ojibwa maiden who was attached to Gladwyn, the commander of the fort, went to take him some moccasins and revealed Pontiac's intricate plot for the morrow. Accordingly Gladwyn was ready when Pontiac came for a council meeting the next day. Pontiac's deep-laid plot was foiled and he made many professions of good will toward the English. The following day, amidst throngs of his swarthy followers, Pontiac approached the fort, and, upon finding it barred, asked the cause of his exclusion. He was told that "he might enter, but his rabble must remain without." With his entire being expressive of unutterable disappointment and rage the foiled warrior turned and strode alone to the river, and started with defiant speed to the village of the Ottawas. Quickly were the revengeful, exasperated feelings of the leader interpreted, and soon from off the surrounding plains scores of yelping satanic beings arose and begun preparations for their direful work of carnage and bloodshed. The war-dance was heard that night, and ere dawn the fort was attacked by the savage multitude. The Indians expected to take the fort by a single blow, but failing in this, they, although scarce of food, began preparations for a protracted siege. Indians arrived daily from the west. The besiegement was conducted for a period of eight months. This persistency on the part of the Indians is without parallel in all Indian history.

This is but an instance of the several years of bloody war begun by Pontiac. Destruction of life and property did not cease in the forts. The borders of the frontier states were the scenes of multitudes of Indian atrocities too frightful to relate.

After a time a portion of the Indians began to retire from the contest, and not long afterward the plans of Pontiac received a terrible blow. The French in Illinois had long been the secret allies of Pontiac, who had been artfully kept in the dark in regard to the English power in Illinois. A letter was sent to the commander of the principal French post in Illinois, instructing him to make known to Pontiac the full extent of the treaty between the English and French. Pontiac, upon the receipt of this news was enraged, and in company with some of his most faithful countrymen, started for the Maumee country, hoping to excite the Indians sufficiently to renew hostilities in the spring. In 1764 Pontiac, with some 400 warriors, began intercessions with the tribes in Illinois. It was at this time that Pontiac had to use threats to enlist the aid of the Illinois tribe.

By this time Gen. Gage was convinced that as long as Illinois remained virtually in the hands of the French, it would be impossible for the Indians not to expect the assistance of the French, and he therefore determined to send out a sufficient force to terminate the war. Accordingly George Croghan, a western trader, was sent with Lieut. Frazer toward the west, through Ohio. The result of this visit was a conference held in Detroit, where Pontiac had begun his satanic scheme. At this conference Pontiac not only accepted the King of England as his father, but he promised to go to Oswego the following spring and enter into a treaty with Sir Wm. Johnson. Soon after this conference, ere the winter snows had fallen, Capt. Stirling led a regiment down the Ohio and to Fort Chartres, where the English colors took the place of the old French flag.

Pontiac did not forget his promise to Croghan, and when the peaceful spring glided gently in he started for Oswego. And there, for the last time before the representatives of English sovereignty, Pontiac concluded his speech with, "I promise to keep this covenant as long as I live." From the council meeting he, with sad heart, turned westward, and for three years lived with his family in the gloom of the forest.

In 1767 the last scene in the drama of Pontiac's life was enacted. A disturbance occurred in Illinois among some French traders and some of the Illinois Indians, not far from St. Louis. Pontiac soon appeared at the place, and not long after his arrival repaired to St. Louis to see an old French friend who commanded the Spanish garrison. While there he moved about with great dignity in the full French uniform which Montcalm had presented him. He was received quite cordially, and when Pontiac heard of an Indian social gathering at Cahokia his French friends, fearing English design, tried to prevent his going. Pontiac, however, in his usual fearless manner, boldly set forth, and was soon under the influence of liquor in the midst of the surging, drunken throng.

An English trader in the village, looking with distrust on Pontiac, resolved to work his destruction. Accordingly a Kaskaskia Indian was bribed with a barrel of whisky to slay the white man's foe. Pontiac, after participating for a time in the drunken pleasures, started for the neighboring woods, singing his medicine songs the while. In this case he was not safe within the mystic spell of his magic songs, for the lurking Illinois Indian drew near and treacherously sunk his tomahawk into Pontiac's brain. Thus perished the greatest Indian warrior that history has portrayed.

With their usual impulsiveness his friends sought to take immediate vengeance on the murderer, but the Illinois Indians protected their brother and Pontiac's followers were driven off. The Sacs, Foxes, Pottawatomies, Ottawas, and other tribes who had answered to Pontiac's command in time of war, combined in their mighty efforts to wreak vengeance on the Illinois tribe. Whole villages were destroyed, and the grassy plains of Illinois stained with Indian blood.

Pontiac's body was procured by the French commander and buried with warlike honors near the fort of St. Louis. "Neither mound nor tablet marks the burial-place of Pontiac. For a mausoleum, a city has risen above the great hero, and the race whom he hated with such burning rancor trample with unceasing footsteps over his forgotten grave."*

WINNEBAGO AND BLACK HAWK WARS.

After the treaty of peace following the war of 1812, the Indians on the northwestern frontier remained in peace and friendship with the whites until 1827. The Winnebagoes, notwithstanding the fact that the Sacs and Foxes had, by the treaty of 1804, ceded to the whites the land between the Illinois and Wisconsin rivers, felt that they really owned land in the northern Illinois and southern Wisconsin. A portion of this land was subsequently retroceded to several tribes; the Winnebagoes, however, not being mentioned in the treaty. The Indians, quarreling about the boundaries of their lands, caused the United States commissioners to make a new arrangement in 1825, admitting that the Winnebagoes had a right to some of the land.

* Parkman.

The miners began to work the lead mines near Galena despite the remonstrances of the Winnebagoes, who claimed the land thereabout. This greatly incensed these Indians, but when they attempted to protect their property in the usual Indian manner they were promptly repulsed. More incensed than ever, some of the Winnebagoes started to get help and advice of some of their principal chiefs about Prairie du Chien. They also quite readily obtained the assistance of the Sioux, who had begun to feel hostile toward the whites on account of their having captured some Sioux Indians and having given them over to their Chippewa enemies. In July, 1827, some Winnebago Indians, having previously killed two white men, collected for plunder or murder around some boats bound for Fort Snelling, which had landed at their encampment above Prairie du Chien. The whites adroitly made the Indians drunk and were up the river out of reach ere the Indians realized what was being done. As the boats returned down the river the crew, anticipating an attack from the Indians at this same place, armed themselves. One of the boats succeeded in getting by in the night, but the other was attacked with all vengeance by the savages. Although the boat became grounded the crew succeeded in compelling the Indians to retire from the contest. A few only of the whites were killed, but so many were wounded that it was a difficult matter for the remaining men to reach Galena.

Upon hearing of this hostile attack the residents about Galena and the state officers took prompt action, and companies and regiments were soon ready for work. Before companies from the southern part of the state could reach the scene of action, Gen. Atkinson, with some regulars, and the Galena militia under Gen. Dodge, had, in the vicinity of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, compelled the savages to sue for peace. Several Indian chiefs were taken prisoner, among whom were Red Bird, of the Sioux tribe, and Black Hawk, of the Sac and Fox tribes. Red Bird died in prison, but Black Hawk, with several others, were acquitted in about a year afterward.

This sudden outbreak of the Indians struck terror to the whites living in the northern part of the state. A portion of the Pottawatomies contemplated joining the Winnebagoes against the whites, and according to Gurdon S. Hubbard, anticipated an attack on Fort Dearborn. Shabbona, the peace chief, communicated to the whites the Indians' intentions. These hostilities begun by the Winnebagoes were but a prelude to those begun, 1831, under Black Hawk.

Black Hawk was a chief of the Sacs, and was born in 1767 or 1768, on the Rock river. He distinguished himself in early life as a brave. In all his difficulties with the Indians it is said that he never lost a battle. "He was distinguished for courage and for clemency to the vanquished. He was an Indian patriot, a kind husband and father, and was noted for his integrity in all his dealings with his tribe and with the Indian traders."* He was aid-de-camp to the great Tecumseh, and during the war of 1812 was in the service of the English. After the close of the trouble in 1812, Black Hawk, instead of making peace with the United States, still kept up his friendship with Canada, and accordingly cherished an implacable hate toward the Americans. He was gloomy and morose in disposition, and his annual visit to his favorite daughter's grave on the Mississippi caused gloomy and melancholy feelings. He was thus led to look back on the supposed wrongs committed by the whites, and to lift the shadowy veil of the future and see his people gradually retiring from the hunting-grounds that had been theirs so long. He saw the dreaded whites taking entire possession of the broad rolling prairies; he saw their "big canoes" gliding over the peaceful waters of the winding streams; he heard the woodman's ax making sad havoc among the noble trees of the grand old forest, and saw the white man's houses on the site of their old villages and over the graves of their dead. With such mingled thoughts of love, patriotism and revenge 'tis scarce a wonder that he sounded the war cry against the advancing enemy.

The Sacs and Foxes, however, had no right to the Rock River country, as it originally belonged to the Santeaux tribe before the incoming of these tribes from the north.

In 1804 a treaty was made by which the Sacs sold to the United States their country on the Rock river. That portion of the Sac and Fox tribes which joined the English in the war of 1812 violated this treaty. This treaty was confirmed by that portion of the tribe which remained at peace, and in 1816, Black Hawk, with other hostile Indians, professed repentance, and, obtaining pardon, recognized the treaty of 1804, which was re-enacted. Still another treaty was made in 1825, hoping thus to settle the hostilities among the northwest tribes. In 1830 a treaty was made with the Sacs and Foxes, in which they confirmed the former treaties and agreed to remove to the territory west of the Mississippi. According to the former of these treaties the Sacs and Foxes had the privilege of hunting on the grounds while they were the property of the United States. In 1829 portions of land around the mouth of the Rock river were sold for settlement, and soon after there was begun a series of depredations among these settlers and the Indians. Each party brought charges against the other, and probably there was trouble on both sides.

At this time the Sacs and Foxes were divided into two factions. One, the larger, was for peace, and was under Keokuk, who had sound judgment, and who ultimately became sole chief of the nation. Keokuk, according to the stipulations of the treaty, withdrew across the river.

In the spring of 1831, Black Hawk, who commanded the hostile faction of the tribes, declared all treaties void, and with his families, some Kickapoo and Pottawatomic allies, and three hundred warriors, recrossed the Mississippi to take possession of their former village and the hunting-grounds thereabouts.

Black Hawk claimed that the treaty of 1804 was made by some chiefs after being made drunk. He said that these chiefs, while in St. Louis seeing about some prisoners, sold their land without the knowledge of the tribe, and that they came home loaded with presents, knew they had sold some land, but could tell nothing more. But be all this as it may, Black Hawk was among those to confirm the treaty when its full purport was known. It seems, then, that it was rather tardy patriotism mingled with his hate for the Americans which caused him to recross the Mississippi river.

When Black Hawk appeared again among the whites, tearing down their fences, taking their food, ordering them away and threatening them with death, the settlers were not tardy in making complaints to Gov. Reynolds. The governor hastened to notify Gen. Gaines, of the United States army, and superintendent of Indian affairs, of the Indian invasion. Volunteers were called for and 1,600 men answered the call.

The entire force was divided into two regiments, an odd battalion and a spy battalion. Col. James D. Henry commanded the first regiment; Col. Dan Lieb, the second; Maj. Nath. Buckmaster, the odd battalion, and Maj. Sam'l Whiteside the spy battalion. Maj. Gen. Joseph Duncan, of the state militia, commanded the entire brigade. This was the largest military force that Illinois had ever raised, and its appearance was truly grand as it traversed with anxious speed the far-reaching prairie.

In the short space of four days the army reached Rockport, about eight miles below the mouth of Rock river, where Gen. Gaines was met. The two generals formed a plan of operations for the morrow, and in the morning the volunteers started across the country toward the Indian town, while the steamboat ascended the river. It was supposed that the battle would be fought on an island opposite the Indian town, and their preparations were made accordingly. The steamboat approached the island, firing grape and canister to find if the enemy were there. While traversing the island, the spy battalion and main body of volunteers became confused and mixed together, but no trace of the Indians was discovered. Some time was spent in ferrying the troops over the deep and rapid stream on the other side of the island, but when the village was reached no Indians were there. Long before the army reached the place the Indians had quietly departed for the western side of the Mississippi. It has been thought that this movement on the part of the Indians was partially anticipated by the two generals. There was a carelessness shown in the movement about the islands that would tend to confirm such an idea, but the exact facts of the case will probably never be known. In lieu of the enemy the feeling of vengeance prompted the soldiers to attack the village itself, and it was set on fire. Soon only ashes remained of the once flourishing village.

From this place the volunteers proceeded to Rock Island, where they encamped for several days. While at Fort Armstrong, on this island, Gen. Gaines threatened to pursue the hostile Indians unless they presented themselves for a peace council. Black Hawk finally was induced to make his appearance, and in company with many other chiefs of the British* band of the Sacs, signed a treaty in which they agreed to stay on the west side of the river, and to cross it only on permission of the governor of Illinois or the president of the United States. In such manner did the British Sacs finally ratify the old treaty of 1804.

Black Hawk, like Tecumseh, had his prophet. This prophet, White Cloud, had great influence among the tribe. He was cunning and used every means in his power to gain influence. Previous to the troubles about the Rock River village, he had gone to Canada, hoping to gain the British to their interest. Upon his return he reported favorably to the Indians, and soon after their crossing to the west side of the river in 1831, a murmur of discontent ran through Black Hawk's tribe. Ever since the last treaty they had been alert for some new excuse for beginning hostilities. White Cloud's assurance that not only the British, but the Ottawas, Chippewas, Pottawatomies and

*Those in sympathy with the British.

Winnebagoes would assist them in regaining their land, caused them to set aside their treaty of peace.

Notwithstanding the sagacity and judgment of Keokuk, which prompted his bold and eloquent speeches, Black Hawk's warlike and revengeful nature claimed for him all the daring and malicious warriors of the nation. Black Hawk, being quite an old man at this time, was easily flattered at thus seeing so many young braves flock to him for leadership.

He, accordingly, with five hundred of the nation's chivalry, equipped for Indian warfare, again, in 1832, started across the Mississippi river. Their deceived eyes saw before them a ready and complete victory over the hated Americans.

After crossing the river they started to the Rock River country, expecting to continue their course up the river and gain the Pottawatomies and Winnebagoes as allies. The whites, knowing of Black Hawk's movements, were somewhat alarmed, and ere they reached their destination several couriers from Gen. Atkinson overtook the Indians, ordering them to recross the Mississippi. This they refused to do, stating that they were peacefully going to their Indian friends' ground to raise corn. Gov. Reynolds, upon becoming acquainted with the facts, immediately called for volunteers. The imminent danger to which the frontier settlers were subject caused, as in 1831, a goodly number of the state's brave and eminent men to respond to the call. In a few days' time 1,800 men met at Beardstown, the former place of rendezvous. The volunteers were organized into four regiments and a spy battalion. The first regiment was commanded by Col. DeWitt; the second, by Col. Fry; the third by Col. Thomas; the fourth by Col. Thompson, and Col. James D. Henry commanded the spy battalion. Brigadier Gen. Samuel W. Whiteside, who commanded the spy battalion in the former campaign, had charge of the entire brigade.

Gen. Whiteside, in company with Gov. Reynolds, took up his line of march April 27. Upon reaching the mouth of Rock river it was arranged that Gen. Whiteside, with volunteers, was to march up the river to Prophetstown and there await the regulars, who were to come with the provisions in keel-boats. Gen. Whiteside, however, set fire to Prophetstown and proceeded up the river to Dixon. Upon the arrival at Dixon Majors Stillman and Bailey were found with near three hundred men. These men were ready to win their laurels, and accordingly made known their desire to hazard danger. It being rumored that some hostile Indians were in the vicinity of "Old Man's Creek"—now called Stillman's Run—Major Stillman was ordered to find the enemy. Soon after reaching the creek and camping for the night, a small party of Indians was descried about a mile away. Some of Stillman's men, thirsting for Indian blood, mounted their horses without orders and started in pursuit of the Indians, who retreated displaying in defiance the red flag. These brave men had not thought of the possibility of Black Hawk being near, and accordingly, when he rallied his men and started in pursuit, their valor changed rapidly to ungovernable fear and they retreated to camp with their horses on a full run. Hearing that Black Hawk was in pursuit the entire company precipitately joined in the retreat. Major Stillman tried in vain to have his men fall back and form on higher ground, but the "higher ground" was not found, and the entire company reached Dixon several at a time. Some of the boldest of the men, however, covered the retreat, fighting bravely, and eleven only of the men were killed.

The accounts given by the returning men were various. The most ludicrous was that given by a man from Kentucky, who, in a very bombastic manner, told of the wonderful mode of attack of the enemy and of the bravery of some of the men—of himself particularly. Although the retreat of Stillman's men caused a high degree of merriment for a time among the remainder of the troops, still no great blame could be laid upon Major Stillman or any of his men, as they were undisciplined and under the circumstances almost any company would have done the same.

After this adventure a council was held in the camp at Dixon, and it was decided that the army should start toward Stillman's creek the next morning. When the volunteers arrived at the scene of the disaster of the night before, not an Indian was to be seen. Some had gone farther up the Rock river and some sought revenge on the nearest white settlers.

As soon as Shabbona, the Pottawatomie peace chief, heard of the murderous designs of Black Hawk, he hastened to inform the white settlers on Indian creek. They had had so many false alarms that the usual precaution was not taken. On May 20 a party of about seventy Indians massacred fifteen persons of the families of Messrs. Hall, Davis and Petigrew, and took two young ladies, Rachel and Silvia Hall, prisoners. The accounts given by J. W. Hall, who escaped, and by the Misses Hall—afterward Mrs. Horn and Mrs. Munson—are authentic and are rife with the horror of the massacre and the fear and suffering experienced by the two prisoners.* These young women, after a weary march of many miles, were finally bought for $2,000 worth of goods by some Winnebago chiefs, at the instigation of Mr. Gratiot. Mrs. Munson died in 1870; Mrs. Horn is still living in Nebraska.

General Whiteside, not finding the Indians where he expected, buried the dead found and returned to Dixon. The majority of the volunteers were now anxious to be discharged, and knowing that little could be done against the will of the men, they were first marched for a time in pursuit of the Indians and then on to Ottawa, where they were discharged.

Previous to this, however, the governor had made a call for more volunteers, and after the discharge a volunteer regiment was soon formed of the discharged men at Ottawa. Jacob Fry was elected colonel; John Thomas, major, and James D. Henry, lieutenant-colonel. On June 15 three brigades, commanded respectively by Gen. Posey, Gen. Alexander and Gen. J. D. Henry, were formed at the place of rendezvous. The entire frontier force now amounted to over three thousand men. Soon attacks were made by Indians on Apple River fort, twelve miles from Galena, and on Fort Hamilton in the lead mines. Galena also was in imminent danger. The fears of the whites in this were soon somewhat quieted, for the Illinois forces were put into motion by June 22, and ere long were almost in the heart of the Indian country. Colonel Dement had pushed forward to Kellogg's Grove, where he, while endeavoring to find the whereabouts of the Indians, was attacked by about three hundred of them. The Indians, after losing near fifteen men, retreated under the well-aimed fire of the whites. After this battle portions of the troops were stationed at various places throughout northern Illinois, while Gen. Atkinson, accompanied by Gen. Henry's brigade, marched up Rock river toward four lakes, where he heard that Black Hawk had fortified his position for an attack. While traveling in this direction he encamped for one night at Turtle Village, a deserted town of the Winnebagoes. Frequent alarms were given that night by the sentinels, and the whole command was paraded for battle several times. The next morning the march was resumed, and at Lake Kush-ka-nong was joined by Gen. Alexander's brigade. After the surrounding country was examined in search of the enemy the entire force was marched up the Rock river to the Burnt Village, another Winnebago town, where Gen. Posey's brigade, Gen. Dodge's battalion, joined it.

* Printed in Baldwin's History of La Salle County.

During this march the scouts brought in frequent reports of Indian trails discovered. Much time was frequently spent in looking up these trails, but all to no avail. At one time the Winnebago Indians assured the general that Black Hawk's entire force was fortified on an island opposite the Burnt Village. After examination this was proved to be another false alarm. By this time eight weeks had been spent in search of the enemy. The volunteer force had been reduced nearly one-half. Still the enemy were weeks in the advance, and owing to lack of provisions Gen. Atkinson thought it necessary to disperse his command for procuring supplies. Gen. Posey marched on to Fort Hamilton; the governor went to his home at Belleville; Henry, Alexander and Dodge went to Portage, Fox and Winnebago, while Gen. Atkinson made his headquarters at Lake Kush-ka-nong, where he remained until the volunteer general returned with supplies. An unfortunate circumstance happened to the forces bound for Fort Winnebago. The horses stampeded, and many were lost and others disabled. After reaching the fort two days were occupied in collecting food, when some Winnebago chiefs reported Black Hawk to be within thirty-five miles of Gen. Atkinson.

Gens. Alexander, Henry, and Maj. Dodge held a council, at which it was decided to march without orders direct upon Black Hawk. But at the time appointed to march Gen. Alexander reported his men unwilling to go, while Maj. Dodge reported his horses too much disabled by their late march. Gen. Henry was naturally indignant at such a state of affairs, and announced his intention to go alone if fifty men would follow him. Soon some mounted volunteers arrived, which augmented, somewhat, the number ready for duty. When Gen. Henry returned to his brigade he found his own men on the point of mutiny. A written protest signed by all except one of the officers was handed to the general. Gen. Henry, with the commanding sternness of a brave and complete soldier, made no other reply than to order the officers under arrest for mutiny, appointing a regiment as a guard to escort them to Gen. Atkinson. This action created a real sense of fear among the officers, and Gen. Henry consented to consult with them before the decisive step was taken. The officers very gladly returned to their duty, and from that time on no charge could be brought against them.

Gen. Henry took up his line of march on July 15, in quest of the Indians. After three day's march they encamped upon the Rock river. Here, learning from some Winnebago Indians that Black Hawk was further up the river, Gen. Henry resolved to make a forced march upon them the next morning, and two men were sent with dispatches to Gen. Atkinson. These men had a chief, Little Thunder, with them as guide, and when eight miles from camp came upon the fresh trail of the enemy. The Indian guide was terrified and started back without permission. Upon reaching the camp he was about to effect the escape of the other Indians when they were stopped and taken to Gen. Henry's tent. Here they confessed that they had been deluding the army, hoping to give the Indians more time for escape. Gen. Henry succeeded in getting from them all they knew of Black Hawk's movements. The next morning other dispatches were sent to Gen. Atkinson, and the army, dispensing with everything that was not absolutely necessary, was ready for a forced march. Notwithstanding that upon the afternoon of the first day a violent storm overtook them, the army marched cheerfully forward, inspired by the sight of the fresh trail to renewed energy. After four and a half days of weary marching, the advance guard came upon the rear of the retreating enemy. The Indians seemingly began to make feints of forming for battle, hoping thus to gain time. The Indians were not overtaken for three or four hours after they were first seen. The advance guard was fired upon by the Indians, but they were soon caused to retreat by a battalion and two regiments charging upon them. The fight was kept up for some time during their retreat until dark. The next morning when Gen. Henry advanced to the Wisconsin, he found that the Indians had all crossed it and escaped to the mountains.

On account of lack of provisions Gen. Henry resolved to fall back to Blue Mounds. Arriving at this place he found Gen. Atkinson with the regulars and Alexander and Posey's brigades. It became evident soon to Gen. Henry and his men that the regular officers and Gen. Atkinson did not enjoy Henry's success. They envied him. After a few days of preparation the army was again put on the march, Henry being placed in the rear to mind the baggage. Henry and his men bore this insult with grave dignity.

On the morning of the fourth day after crossing the Wisconsin the advance reached the Mississippi bluffs. When within about three or four miles of the camp the army was attacked by about twenty-eight Indians. They adroitly retreated up the river, followed by the entire army except Henry's brigade that was left without orders. After a council among his officers, Henry hastily concluded to continue on the main trail. Upon arriving at the foot of a bluff Henry halted and the horses were left. When the advance men came within sight of the river they were fired upon by the Indians. Henry came up with the main body and a general battle ensued. The fifty advance Indians retreated upon the others and in the surprise all was confusion. The Indians were driven from place to place and finally, at the point of the bayonet, were forced into the river, some reaching an island in the river. By this time Gen. Atkinson with the other part of the men arrived. Gen. Atkinson soon formed the regulars and Dodge's battalion for an attack upon the island. Wading through the deep water a fierce battle began on the island. The Indian loss here was very great. A number of the Indians had escaped across the river ere the action began. Black Hawk, who led the twenty that Gen. Atkinson followed, escaped up the river. Black Hawk and his party were captured while on the Wisconsin river by some Winnebago chiefs, who brought them to Prairie du Chien and delivered them up to the United States Indian agent there. Gen. Atkinson, with the regulars, went to Prairie du Chien in a steamboat, while the volunteers went by land. Here Gen. Scott was met, who had been sent from the east to take chief command in the war. While on the way his army was afflicted with Asiatic cholera, so that he did not reach the Mississippi until the decisive battle was fought. Gov. Ford considers Henry the hero of the entire war. From Prairie du Chien the volunteers were sent to Dixon, where they were discharged. The prisoners were sent down to Rock Island, thence on to Jefferson barracks. A treaty was here made with the Sacs and Foxes by which the United States gained a large portion of the territory between the Des Moines and Turkey rivers in Iowa. From Jefferson barracks the prisoners were taken to Washington. They were also taken to Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and other cities, that they might see the power and number of the whites. They were returned to their own country in June, 1833. Black Hawk died in 1840, at the age of eighty, and was buried by his people on the banks of the Mississippi.

INDIAN MANNERS AND CUSTOMS.

The Indians depended, for their sustenance, upon hunting, fishing, and primitive tilling of the soil. They knew nothing about herding animals. They had but few domestic animals, the principal being the horse and the dog. They pursued their game with arrows tipped with horn, pointed stone, or some similar substance. Fish were taken in nets or with the spear. Their meat was preserved by smoking. The fruit and berry season was a happy time for them and the young girls went joyfully forth to gather the luscious food. Nearly all the Indians of America cultivated the soil. The articles cultivated were few: maize, the tobacco plant, the squash and the bean, complete the list. Their women did the farming, and often, after their stores were collected, all was squandered in some great festivities. They made but little preparation for the future, thus showing their lack of thriftiness.

Everyone has heard of the hospitality of the Indian. A stranger may enter his cabin in the day or in the night, be freely entertained, and no questions, as to why he came or when he will go, are asked. An Indian will often give up his own resting-place that his guest may be comfortable.

The Indians are sociable creatures. Their living together, many families in one cabin, and the collecting of houses into towns, proves this statement. Polygamy was allowed, but there was an unwritten law in regard to who should marry. An Indian could not marry his own kinfolks, those who used the same totem or family symbol, but his wives could bear the closest relationship. The marriage ceremony consisted of the groom making a few presents to the bride's father. If the presents were accepted the contract was complete, and for a time the husband lodged with his wife's family. Divorees were allowed, and the marriage tie could be severed as easily as it was made. When divorces occurred, the mother, of necessity, claimed all the children. If a mother died, the innocent little babe shared her grave. Thus she alone had care of the babe in death even as in life. No restraint whatever was put upon the Indian children. They, by exposure, became hardy. The Indian boy learns to be courageous by hearing the daring tales of Indian exploits told around the wigwam fire. The bow and arrow are among his first playthings. His ear early hears the war song, and its purport soon is recognized. With exquisite joy he looks forward to joining, for the first time, in the war-dance. While the Indian boy, from the example of his elders, thus becomes a warrior, and learns to be proud of idleness, in like manner the girl learns to be a drudge. The wife is but a slave.

The Indian's idea of a Supreme Being is very indefinite. A spirit lies in everything; he recognizes it in every action and in every object. Yet they believed in the Great Spirit. It is said that the Illinois worshiped a god under the name Manitou, and this they found in every animal. The medicine-man boasted of a power over the spirits, and was a sort of magician. The Indian had great faith in his subverting every evil and curing all ills.

The waking Indian recognized his dreams as glimpses into the invisible world. It was thus he received messages from his god. They professed no fear of death; they believed the dead still lived, and therefore buried with them their earthly belongings. The superstitions among the different Indians of America are various. Some of the southern tribes, upon the death of a lord or chief, killed two finely formed Indians that they might act as servants to the lord of shadows and death.

Bancroft quotes from Brebeuf, a Jesuit missionary, the substance of a statement in regard to the living sometimes visiting the remote region of the shadows. Orpheus-like, a brother went in search of his Eurydice, in this case a sister, and but for his uncontrollable curiosity would have secured her from the society of the dead and restored her to her family. Festivals were often held in honor of the dead. Some of the tribes every few years gathered and cleansed the bones from their various burial-places, and amid their most solemn ceremonies buried them in a common grave.

All over America the Indians practiced placing the dead in a sitting posture for burial.

The red man imitates rather than invents. He equals the white man in the acuteness of the senses, but his moral and reasoning faculties are inferior.

The Indians had no musical genius among them equal to a Mozart, nor did they have a Raphael as an artist; but all recognized music, and danced oftentimes with grace to their wild melodies, and the decoration on their clothing and bodies was harmonious and sometimes elegant. "We call them cruel, yet they never invented the thumb-screw, or the boot, or the rack, or broke on the wheel, or exiled bands of their nations for opinion's sake; and protected the monopoly of the medicine-man by the gallows, or the block, or by fire. There is not a quality belonging to the white man which did not also belong to the American savage; there is not among the aborigines a rule of language, a custom, an institution, which, when considered in its principles, has not a counterpart among their conquerors. The unity of the human race is established by the exact correspondence between their respective powers; the Indian has not one more, has not one less, than the white man; the map of the faculties is for both identical."

In this great age of improvement the Indian, too, has caught the spirit. The Indians of to-day are greatly in advance of those the whites first found here. The gun with modern improvements has in a measure replaced the deadly arrow. The white man's ax and knife soon pushed their primitive counterparts into the background. Among some of the tribes the water of the stream has been made to subserve their purpose, and water-mills have taken the place of the old-time stone mortar.

The old plan of writing hieroglyphics on pieces of bark has in a degree been abolished, and some of the Indians of to-day make use of the printing-press. Instead of traveling mile after mile of forest and prairie for all their game, herds and flocks are now kept by them. They have learned the use of the plow, and their agriculture is more extensive. The idea of one ruling Great Spirit is now prevalent in every Indian wigwam. The felicity of the white man's home-life has been noised abroad, and the Indian is beginning to cherish his one wife as his equal. When one remembers the slowness with which the peasantry of Europe have advanced, even when surrounded by that country's greatest intellect, and then reflects upon the length of time the American Indian has been in contact with the white man's intellectual culture, he is compelled to pause and give a tribute to the red man, confessing that he, in spite of all the war of words to the contrary, deserves a good share of credit for his position of to-day.

CHAPTER VI.

ILLINOIS A DEPENDENCY OF CANADA.

THE French were the first white people to lay claim to any of the soil of Illinois. As has been stated, Marquette's mission was founded in 1675, and the first military occupation was at Fort Creve-cœur in 1680. The first settlement was at Fort St. Louis on the Illinois river in 1682. The oldest permanent settlement in Illinois and in the valley of the Mississippi is Kaskaskia,* made about 1690.†

After the settlement at Kaskaskia others were made at Cahokia, Prairie du Roche, Prairie du Pont and Port Chartres. The Jesuit priests were the temporal as well as spiritual rulers of these missions. The quiet rule of these pious men gave to the early French settlers such feelings of justice, integrity and brotherly love, that for nearly a century they had no need of a law court. They lived peacefully by the side of the Indians, and some time elapsed before a local government was established.

Province of Louisiana.—In 1711 the French settlements of the Mississippi valley were united, the province was named Louisiana, and Mobile was made the capital. This province included all the country lying north and south between Canada and Gulf of Mexico and east and west between the Alleghany and Rocky Mountains. France conceived the idea that this could be made a great commercial country, and accordingly sent over one Crozat with a party of men to develop its resources. Although some advance was made in settlements, Crozat's expedition was counted a failure; he had neglected agriculture, the best resource of the country. Crozat was recalled.

About the year 1716* Fort Rosalie was erected on the present site of Natchez. This is the oldest permanent settlement of the Mississippi valley south of Illinois.

Company of the West.—At the time of Louis XIV's death, and when the Duke of Orleans was made regent, France was greatly in debt. It was then that John Law, a gambling Scotchman from Edinburgh, first brought forward his scheme for liquidating debts. The regent listened with willing ear and it was not long until Law's bank was astonishing the people with its wonderful achievements. Law next brought forward his Mississippi scheme, and with a word from this irresistible man the imaginative French brain saw in the early future, upon the soil of distant Louisiana, immense commercial cities, vast fields of grain and fruit and exhaustless mineral mines. In 1717, under Law's direction, the western company was organized.

The eyes of the people were at last opened, investigations were made which resulted in the banks stopping payment. The company in the west, however, did not meet with quite such an inglorious failure as did the bank of France. Before much was accomplished the company was merged into the company of the Indies. From the expenses caused by the Spanish and Indian war, and as a partial result of Law's failure, the company became embarrassed and a surrender of their charter was granted.

At this time the settlements of Louisiana were in a prosperous condition. Illinois was the principal agricultural region of the province.

Under Royal Governors.—The first thing to be done after the French government again had Louisiana, was to conquer the Chickasaw Indians. Several victories were gained by the Chickasaws, but at last, in 1740, peace was concluded without bloodshed.

About 1750 the French colonists in the Mississippi valley began seriously to take part in the fierce controversy that had been taking place between France and England. The treaty of peace between these countries had left undefined the boundaries between their possessions in America.

Neither the French nor the English were idle in their machinations to obtain the Indian alliance for strife on the contested lands.

On October 30, 1753,* George Washington began his renowned journey across the forests to Ohio. In the next year was the English commencement and the French completion of Fort Du Quesne, at the junction of the Monongahela and Alleghany rivers. Not long after, in the battle of Little Meadows, Washington was the first of the English to discharge his gun. "It was the signal gun, whose reverberations, following the flight of years, announced the revolution which banished from the new world the institutions of the middle ages, and erected upon their ruins a free government." A force from Fort Chartres soon repaired to Fort Du Quesne and Washington fell back to Fort Necessity. At this place Washington was compelled to capitulate, and this was a signal for the mother countries to take an interesting part in the contest. In 1755 occurred the terrible disaster known as Braddock's defeat. In 1758 the French retired west from Fort Du Quesne. The English were now gaining ground, and Ticonderoga, Crown Point and Niagara fell successively into their hands. Quebec fell in 1759, and the great contest was at an end. Illinois was no longer a French province.

Illinois a British Province: Pontiac's Conspiracy.—Although Quebec fell in 1759 it was not until 1765 that the English had actual possession of Illinois. Capt. Sterling was the first English commandant of Illinois.

In 1768 the commandant, Lieut.-Col. Wilkins, established a civil court. This was held December 6, 1768, and was the first jurisdiction by common law ever held within the present boundaries of Illinois. The court was not popular, and in 1774 the old government was in part resumed.

It was about this time that the English colonists began seriously to be antagonistic to the home rule. England succeeded during the first years of the war in enlisting the French with her.

* Irving's Life of Washington.

While this struggle was going on the Indians revived their ever-ready feelings of jealousy to the whites who advanced toward their lands. The western frontiers were again the scenes of horrifying Indian warfare. To put a stop to such dire disaster the Americans thought to send a company westward toward the Mississippi. George Rogers Clark was intrusted with the command of this expedition. This man was found to be equal to all emergencies. His penetrating eyes were the first to realize the great advantage to the colonists subsequent to the acquisition of the French settlements in Illinois to their own territory. Upon stating his views to Gov. Patrick, Henry Clark, with his men, was ordered to proceed westward in great haste and with all possible secrecy. His men even for some time did not know the object of the expedition. It was on July 4, 1778, that Clark and his 160 men reached the hills east of Kaskaskia. Clark so successfully manœvered that he, with some of his men, entered the fort, while the others simultaneously entered the village. The people were so thoroughly surprised that in less than three hours the invaders had control of the village. For several days Clark stayed in and about Kaskaskia, keeping the people in the most abject fear. After sufficiently frightening them he explained the cause of his sudden appearance before them and offered such magnanimous terms that their former fear gave place to sudden joy and thanksgiving. Clark, in his own peculiar way, subdued all the French provinces in Illinois, as well as St. Vincent, or Vincennes, in Indiana, in an original manner with the Indians. Not one drop of blood was shed.

Clark's later success in taking St. Vincent, which had been retaken by Hamilton, is well known. This bold and hazardous enterprise on the part of Clark settled the ownership of the beautiful country along the Wabash and Mississippi rivers. It has ever since belonged to the Americans.

Clark died in 1818, and his body rests near Louisville, Kentucky. This country certainly owes a debt of gratitude to him. In looking over the strong points of his character it seems that he surely belongs to that rare class of men of whom our Washington is the type. Illinois would do well to erect a monument in honor of George Rogers Clark's noble work.

Illinois a County.—In October, 1778, the country lying northwest of the Ohio river was made into a county of Virginia, and was called Illinois county. Virginia claimed it by right of private conquest. In 1784 Virginia ceded the country to the Continental Congress.

Northwestern Territory.—By the ordinance of 1787 the whole of the country northwest of the Ohio was considered as one district for temporary government. For the good of the original states and of the future states six articles were drawn up which were to constitute a perpetual contract between the people of the territory and those of the original states. According to these articles, there was to be religious tolerance in the territory; trial by jury; education was to be encouraged; the territory was always to be a part of the United States, and there was to be no slavery tolerated. This compact, thus partially quoted, has exerted from then till now an influence in this country which could scarcely have been anticipated by the originators of the articles.

Maj. Gen. Arthur St. Clair was elected the first governor of the Northwestern territory. St. Clair was a Scotchman and came to America in 1755. He served in the French and Indian war, and later was president of the congress of the United States. In 1788 St. Clair county was organized, which included all of the present State of Illinois south of the mouth of Little Mackinaw creek on the Illinois river. Three judicial districts were made and a court of common pleas was established. John Edgar, John B. Barbeau and J. D. Moulin were appointed judges to hold courts in their respective districts. Justices of the peace were appointed throughout the country. Cahokia was made the county seat. Thus began the existence of United States law in the territory. John Rice Jones was the first man who practiced law in Illinois. He was a very energetic lawyer and a fluent speaker. At the time of his death in 1824 he was judge of the supreme court of Missouri.*

About the year 1790 a series of misfortunes arose which soon caused the French settlements to decline. These misfortunes were of various kinds, such as inundations of the Mississippi, severity of the seasons, and supplies granted to troops with no requital. Besides these causes, the cheerful, free and passive nature of the Frenchmen was not altogether congenial with the stern, sturdy, active natures of the Puritans who now thronged in great numbers, and French immigration was fast ceasing.

Tecumseh's Conspiracy: Indians again on the war-path.†—It must be remembered that France made no extensive purchases of the Indians; consequently in the treaty of Paris only small portions of land were transferred to the English. The English then had but little to transfer to America, save what she had received from France. Congress felt that as the Indians had adhered mostly to the English they were conquered too. Congress felt that the land of the Indian was rightfully won, and settlements were made accordingly. At the same time efforts were being put forward to establish certain peace. Treaties with various tribes were made in 1784, 1785 and in 1789. With all these precautions it was found that most of the tribes in the west were not bound by agreement to yield land north of the Ohio. The Indian confederacy had sullenly determined that the Ohio should form a perpetual boundary between the Indians and the whites, and accordingly organized and began a war against the Americans.

The main theater of this war was within the present limits of Ohio and Indiana, while Illinois had little part in it save in resisting the Indian hostilities on the frontier. The Kickapoo Indians seemingly were the most hostile and early began their depredations. All through the years from 1778 to 1794 Illinois was the theater where many barbarous murders were enacted.

For six years the war raged, when finally, through the efforts of Gen. Wayne, a treaty was drawn up and signed by all the principal men of the Indian confederacy. In this treaty various tracts of land in the Northwest were ceded to the Indians. In Illinois there was one at the mouths of the Chicago and Illinois rivers and one at the Peoria's fort.

Peace had come at last, and the eager whites started forward the checked tide of emigration.

In 1788 the population of Illinois was about 1220.*

In 1778 there was but one professor of religion in the colonies of Illinois. This was a lady and a member of the Presbyterian church.

James Smith, a Baptist minister, preached the first Protestant sermon in Illinois. He also made the first Protestant converts.

The first regularly organized Protestant church in Illinois was that organized in 1796 at New Design, by David Badgley. The first school for American settlers in this state was taught by Samuel Seely in 1783.

In 1795 Gov. St. Clair made a division of St. Clair county, naming the lower county Randolph, in honor of Edmund Randolph, of Virginia.

In 1796 the white population of Ohio was over 5000, and according to the ordinance of 1787 the country was entitled to another grade of government. In the latter part of 1799 the new order of government was in full working order.

Indiana Territory.—On May 7, 1800, congress passed an act dividing the Northwestern territory; and the Indiana territory was formed. In this territory the present states of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, and almost all of Indiana, were included. The government was to be somewhat similar to that of the first grade of government.

On May 13, 1800, William H. Harrison was appointed governor of the Indiana territory. By March of 1801 it was in full working order. By the act of congress March 26, 1804, Louisiana was annexed to the Indiana territory. In the previous year, through the efforts of some of America's deep-thinking men, Louisiana had been purchased of France. Before a year had passed after its admission to Indiana territory Louisiana was made into a separate territory. Ohio was admitted to the Union as a state in 1802.

In 1803, 1804 and 1805 treaties were made with various Indian tribes by which the greater part of Illinois was divested of its Indian title, and the land, even in the Indian's wavering judgment, was a part of the United States. Some of the Indians, however, were loth to fulfill their promises and retire from their old hunting-grounds, and it was some time before Indian depredations ceased.

According to the laws adopted by the territory of Indiana only the will of a majority of the freeholders was necessary for changing the government from the first to that of the second grade of territorial government. The change of government was made in 1805. Part of the old laws were re-enacted, while some new ones were made.

Territory of Illinois.—Michigan had been erected into a separate territory in 1805, and the people of Illinois as well desired a separation from the Indiana territory.

By the act of congress February 3, 1809, all of the present Illinois and Wisconsin was to constitute the new territory of Illinois. Hon. Ninian Edwards was appointed the first governor and Nathaniel Pope secretary of the territory. The seat of government was fixed at Kaskaskia.

At the time of the organization of the territory the population was about 9,000. In 1810 there were over 12,000. The immigration, it will be seen, was steadily on the increase. But soon there was to be a check in the growth of the settlements. Already in the dark forests might be heard the war-whoop of the secret friends of the English. After the treaty of peace between England and America, the Indians had desisted in their warfare only when they had no further hope of aid from the English. They were ready then and quickly interpreted the signs of ill-feeling between the United States and Great Britain, just previous to the war of 1812. In 1810 Tecumseh, chief of the Shawnees, took measures which placed the nature of his future actions beyond a doubt. The immediate cause of Tecumseh's excitement was the treaty of Fort Wayne, in 1809. He was not at the council and claimed that a part of his land had been illegally sold. His theory was that the lands of the Indians could not be disposed of without the consent of all the tribes. His plan was to substantiate this principle by uniting all the western tribes and, if necessary, force the United States to give back the land ceded at Fort Wayne. This conspiracy of Tecumseh had only been excelled by that of Pontiac.

Tecumseh boldly avowed, at a council meeting called by Gov. Harrison, at Vincennes, his intention to retain the land. He was ordered to leave the village, and ere long Gov. Harrison began preparations to resist hostilities.

Gov. Harrison started north with his army. When near Prophetstown he told the Indians he had no hostile intentions, provided they adhered to their treaties. Encampment was made for the night, but ere daylight dawned the Indians attacked the camp. Thus began the famous battle of Tippecanoe. The end was not what the Prophet anticipated, for the surprise was not a complete one. With but a moment's warning the Governor's army fought valiantly, and the Indians were repulsed with a loss equal to that of the Americans.

Tecumseh was in the south at the time of this, and upon his return he, in dismay, saw his grand conspiracy dashed to the ground, and finally departed for Canada, where he joined the British standard. While such a crisis had been reached in Indiana hostilities were growing more manifest in Illinois. Preparations for defense began to be made throughout the state. Forts, blockhouses and stockades were soon built. Fort Russell, a little northwest of Edwardsville, was established by Gov. Edwards, and was the strongest stockade fort in Illinois.

Gov. Edwards tried in vain to make peace with the Indians of the state.

During the winter of 1811-12 the British in the east kept up their insulting actions toward the Americans, and the result was that on the 19th of June, 1812, the United States declared war against Great Britain.

In August of this year occurred the massacre, already spoken of, at Fort Dearborn.

his course of indecision and unmanly fear by giving into English hands the town of Detroit and territory of Michigan.

Thus the English and their allies were in possession of the entire Northwest, with the exception of one or two forts. Every citizen in the pioneer states seemed thrilled with one desire—to wipe out the disgraces of the year and to protect the people from the horrors of savage supremacy. Gov. Edwards organized and started an expedition against the Indians on the Illinois river. They at least succeeded in frightening the Indians, who retreated upon their approach. After thirteen days absence Gov. Edwards' army, without loss, returned to Fort Chartres.

At the beginning of 1813 everything was gloomy in the west. Stronger preparations were made to resist the wily foe. Ranging companies were formed, but in spite of all precautions the savages continued to perform some terrible deeds. In the summer of 1813 a joint force from Illinois and Missouri was sent up the Mississippi river. Quite an extent of country was gone over and the army reached Camp Russell in October, 1813. During this entire campaign not a battle was fought; no foe was seen. This campaign, however, served to show the strength of the whites and the result was that the settlers were not molested by the Indians during the entire winter.

The next year several expeditions were made up the Mississippi river, but only partial success was attained.

The gloom in the west was soon dispelled by the joyful news of the treaty of peace made at Ghent. The war of 1812 was at an end.

In 1812 the government of the Illinois territory was changed to the second grade of government for territories. By a proclamation of the governor the members of the first legislature of Illinois convened in Kaskaskia, the seat of government, November 25, 1812.† The place of meeting was in the upper room of an old stone building that had been used as headquarters of the French commandant after Fort Chartres was abandoned. What a comparison that old building with steep roof and unpainted board gables presents to the magnificent structure in which the legislature of to-day assembles!

On December 13, 1812, some of the old laws were re-enacted, while some new ones were made. Under the authority of Nathaniel Pope the territorial laws were revised, and they were printed in 1815. To an inhabitant of Illinois to-day it seems almost incredible that not eighty years ago the punishments for crime frequently were whipping on the bare back, standing in the pillory, confinement in stocks and branding with red-hot irons. Yet so it was, and people could even be cast into prison for debt. Happily such laws are not of our time.

Three general assemblies were elected by the people while Illinois was a territory.

Edwards county was the first county formed by the legislature, and was named in honor of the governor.

After the close of the war of 1812 Illinois seemed to begin a new growth. The tide of immigration, which had been retarded for a time, set in with redoubled force. New settlements were made in every direction. Agriculture still continued to be the leading occupation. Owing to the difficulties to be met with in transportation there was but little commerce in the early times of Illinois. Articles from the eastern states came in wagons over the mountains, then down the river in flatboats. Keelboats passed slowly to and fro between St. Louis and New Orleans, carrying needful articles to both cities. But this was not long to last, for steamboats soon came into use.

CHAPTER VII.

ILLINOIS A STATE.

“What constitutes a State?

* * * * *

Men who their duties know,

But know their rights, and, knowing, dare maintain.

* * * * *

And sovereign law, that states collected will

O'er thrones and globes elate,

Sits empress, crowning good, refreshing ill.”

A NEW era in the history of Illinois began in 1818. The people for some time had been wishing for a change of government, and accordingly Nath. Pope, the delegate to congress, was instructed to plead for the admission of Illinois into the Union. Judge Pope's discernment led him to make some amendments to the bill for admission, by which the port of Chicago was brought within the boundaries of the state. This addition to the new state connected her interests more firmly with the east, the south and the west. Thus while greatly advancing Illinois, another link was added to the chain which bound the states in union.

Another amendment of great importance in the future well-being of Illinois was the appliance of three per cent of the fund from the sale of public lands to the advancement of education.

A convention was called to meet in July, 1818, at Kaskaskia, for the purpose of drafting the first constitution of the State of Illinois. Elias K. Kane was the principal member of this convention, and to his talent are we indebted for many worthy features of the constitution.

An election for the officers of the new state was held in September, 1818. Shadrach Bond was elected as the first governor of the State of Illinois. Gov. Bond was a native of Maryland, and was a plain man, who made no pretensions to learning, but was possessed of good common sense. Pierre Menard was made the first lieutenant governor of the state. He being a foreigner, and not having been a citizen thirty years, the people of the state showed their belief in his worth by altering a part of the constitution for his special benefit.

These two men both had counties named in their honor.

In October, 1818, the legislature convened at Kaskaskia and elected Joseph Philips chief justice, while Thomas C. Brown, John Reynolds and William P. Foster were made associate justices. Ninian Edwards and Jesse B. Thomas were elected Illinois' first senators to congress. Elias K. Kane was appointed secretary of state, while Daniel P. Cook was elected first attorney general; Elijah C. Berry, auditor of public accounts, and Jesse B. Thomas, state treasurer.

By the men whose names are here recorded, Illinois, as a state, was launched upon the sea of time. She was only launched as yet; her voyage began when on December 3, 1818, congress declared her one of the United States, and placed her upon an equal footing with the original states. At the time of the adoption of the constitution only about one-fourth of the state was organized into counties. Fifteen counties were formed, and of these Bond was farthest north. The settled portion of the state was all south of this county. In 1820 the population of Illinois was 55,211. The increase during the preceding decade had been enormous. With the exception of the French and Canadian settlers most of the inhabitants came in from the south.

At this time the majority of the people of Illinois were in debt. This had come about by the anticipations of the settlers to become suddenly wealthy. A crisis came and the legislature sought to remedy the evil by creating state banks. Several banks were founded, the principal one being at Vandalia. This banking scheme, however, proved a failure. During Bond's administration the seat of government was moved to Vandalia.

GOVERNOR COLES.

Ed. Coles was elected governor in 1822. The slavery question was thoroughly discussed at this election. Anti-slavery gained the day. Mr. Coles was a native of Virginia, and, upon leaving that state for Illinois, had emancipated his slaves. This election came while the people were still agitated upon the settlement of the Missouri question of slavery. Although with the election of Gov. Coles the slavery party was defeated, it was not by any means annihilated. This party expressed themselves as determined to carry their measures in the sessions of the legislatures of 1822-3. Soon the entire state was in an unheard of condition of excitement. A furious contest began which was to last for some eighteen months. Contributions were raised for the benefit of both sides. Gov. Coles cheerfully contributed $4,000, his entire term's salary.

The day of election finally arrived, and both parties exerted themselves to the utmost to show a full vote. At last the decision was made and again anti-slavery gained the day. Illinois had never witnessed such an exciting and angry election as took place that day. But all ill-feelings soon subsided and before a year had passed all seemed pleased with the existing state of affairs.

The summer of 1825 was noted for the great increase in the number of immigrants. The majority of the people seemed bound for Sangamon county, which at this time was the most populous county of the state.

Some space will readily be used just here to make mention of Gen. La Fayette's visit to Illinois. Gov. Coles had met Gen. La Fayette in France, and upon hearing of his arrival in the United States had requested him to visit Illinois. This visit was made in May, 1825. Great numbers of people extended to La Fayette a patriotic welcome. Receptions were given him at Vandalia and at Shawneetown. From this place La Fayette took a kindly and affectionate leave of his Illinois friends.

GOVERNOR EDWARDS.

In August, 1826, Ninian Edwards was elected governor. Gov. Ford's description of Gov. Edwards is quite brilliant. His "princely appearance" and "florid eloquence" are made special mention of.

At this same election there was an exciting contest between Dan P. Cook and Joseph Duncan, the candidates for congress. Mr. Duncan gained the victory. This election may be considered, aside from the troubles in 1824, the beginning of party principles in Illinois.

Gov. Edwards no sooner entered the duties of his office than he began to complain of the condition of the state finances. He thought he detected wrong acting in the officers in some of the banks, and did not hesitate to make known his charges. Many of the influential men of the state opposed Gov. Edwards in this movement, and the result was, that all the men were acquitted of the charges brought against them.

During Gov. Edwards' administration, in 1827, occurred the Winnebago war, or scare as it is sometimes called. This trouble has already been referred to. In 1827 Galena was fast attracting men to the lead mines.* Already there were six or seven thousand miners in and around Galena. It was there at this time that the offensive name of "suckers" as applied to Illinoisans originated. Many people from the central and southern part of the state were in the habit of going up the Mississippi to the lead mines to work during the summer, but went back down the river to winter. Some one saw a resemblance between such movements and those of the fish known as suckers. Hence the Illinoisans were termed "suckers." Some other accounts are given of the origin of the term, but this seems the most plausible. It is to be hoped that the use of this odious term, as well as of those terms applied to the inhabitants of some of our neighboring states, will ere long be done away with.

In 1830 the population was 157,447.† From Alton to Peoria settlements were quite plenty, principally near the streams. As yet the people had strenuously avoided settling on the open prairies.

GOVERNOR REYNOLDS.

John Reynolds was elected governor in August, 1830. Gov. Reynolds was a native of Pennsylvania. He came from Tennessee to Illinois in 1800. He had long lived among the frontier people and he had thoroughly imbibed their ways. Stuvé styles him "one of the public oddities in the annals of the state." Gov. Ford styles him as a "man of remarkably good sense and shrewdness for the sphere in which he chose to move." He had a kind disposition, and was always ready to bestow a favor. He was in public life a great deal, and died in 1865. The Black Hawk war, which has already been mentioned, occurred during Gov. Reynolds' administration.

The session of the legislature in 1832-3 was especially distinguished by the fact that at this time the first serious efforts were made for the construction of railroads in the state.

* Ford. † Ford.

GOVERNOR DUNCAN.

Joseph Duncan was made governor of the state in 1834. Gov. Duncan was a native of Kentucky, distinguished himself during the war of 1812, and later held several state offices. During the session of 1824-5 he greatly distinguished himself by framing and introducing the first bill in regard to a system of free schools in the state. In Gov. Duncan's message he recommended many state improvements, which were quite fully carried out. Public highways were made throughout the state and a good deal of attention was paid to the canal and railroad charters. At the time of Gov. Duncan's election the state was in an unusually prosperous condition and the people were free from debt.

During his administration several banking schemes were brought forward with the hopes of bettering the condition of affairs; but it was soon discovered that this was a mistaken idea.

Under his administration, too, was begun the "State internal improvement system," and at the close of his administration people had not ceased to be dazzled by this grand scheme.

In 1837 the Lovejoy riot occurred.* Lovejoy had tried to start an abolitionist paper in St. Louis. Being compelled to leave that city he went to Alton. He was strongly urged not to start such a paper in Alton, but notwithstanding such urging, and in spite of threats, he started a religious paper. Soon his abolition principles began to be manifest, and the community was roused against him. The final result was that a riot occurred, in which Lovejoy lost his life.

In 1837 Ex-Gov. Reynolds, with others, built the first railroad in the state. This road was six miles long, and connected a coal mine with the Mississippi river opposite St. Louis. The first locomotive in Illinois was put upon the Meredosia & Springfield railroad November 8, 1838.

GOVERNOR CARLIN.

Gov. Carlin, of Irish lineage, was elected in 1838, and was a native of Kentucky. He came to Illinois from Missouri in 1812. He was a commander of a spy battalion in the Black Hawk war. He held several public offices. His death occurred in 1852.

Although some began to see the folly of the system, yet Gov. Carlin was decidedly in favor of the state internal improvement system. Before a year had passed, however, the governor began to change his mind in regard to such a plan. In 1840 the end came.

* Reynolds' "My Own Times."

The state improvement system had proved an absolute failure. Illinois had not been alone in this species of folly. Several other states had learned a like lesson. The state was now in debt, and hard times had come. Gov. Ford, speaking of the year 1841, says: "For want of full knowledge of her condition abroad, and of the condition of other new states in a short time, Illinois and some others in the west became a stench in the nostrils of the civilized world. The people at home began to wake up in terror; the people abroad, who wished to settle in a new country, avoided Illinois, as they would pestilence and famine, and there was great danger that the future emigrants would be men who, having no regard for their own characters, would also have no regard for the state where they might live.

An additional trouble came to the people of Illinois when in February and in June, 1842, the state bank and the bank at Shawneetown exploded. Certain ruin seemed impending over this and its neighboring states.

GOVERNOR FORD.

Thomas Ford was elected governor of Illinois in 1842. He was born in Pennsylvania in 1800. His father was killed by the Indians in 1802. After his father's death his mother with her family moved west and finally settled in Illinois.

Gov. Ford was quite a good lawyer. As an author, too, he ranked quite high.

Gov. Ford thus sums up the condition of the state at the time he became governor: "The domestic treasury of the state was indebted for the ordinary expenses of the government to the amount of about $313,000. Auditor's warrants on the treasury were selling at fifty per cent discount, and there was no money in the treasury whatever, not even to pay postage on letters. The annual revenues applicable to the payment of ordinary expenses amounted to $130,000. The treasury was bankrupt; the revenues were insufficient; the people were unable and unwilling to pay high taxes, and the state had borrowed itself out of all credit. A debt of near $14,000,000 had been contracted for canals, railroads, and other purposes. The currency of the state had been annihilated, and there was not over $200,000 or $300,000 in good money in the pockets of the inhabitants, which occasioned a general inability to pay taxes. The whole people were indebted to merchants, nearly all of whom were indebted to the banks or to foreign merchants; the banks owed everybody, and none were able to pay.

The governor and legislature set themselves to work to extricate the state from some of her embarrassments. In spite of many discouragements success was the outcome. At the close of Gov. Ford's administration the state government expenses were reduced from $313,000 to $31,212. The treasury contained $9,260. About $3,000,000 of the public debt had been liquidated. All this had been done besides other things not mentioned, so that the credit of the state became sufficient to borrow enough money to finish the Illinois & Michigan canal. Mr. Stuvé says: "The year 1845 was the turning point in her financial embarrassments and marks the beginning of her since unabated prosperity and march to greatness."

Gov. Ford was certainly the right man in the right place. It would be impossible for Illinois to estimate how much of her present prosperity she owes to the genius and fidelity of this honored man. After his term of office closed Gov. Ford retired to private life, and during his retirement prepared his history of Illinois. Upon his deathbed in 1850 he placed the manuscript in the hands of Gen. James Shields, with the request that he should have it published for the benefit of his family.

GOVERNOR FRENCH.

In the election of August, 1846, A. C. French was chosen to succeed Gov. Ford. Gov. French was a native of New Hampshire, and was born August 2, 1808. His father died when he was young, and most of his early education devolved upon his mother, who died when her son was but nineteen years old. Notwithstanding his fatherly care of four brothers and sisters, he attended Dartmouth College for a time and afterward read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1831. After this he removed to Illinois and became a warm friend of Stephen A. Douglas. After the close of his services as governor he occupied the chair of mathematics of McKendrie College at Lebanon. Gov. French being, as he was, at the head of the state, found himself equal to the emergency, and through his economy, prudence and discretion the credit of the state, which had been partially regained by Gov. Ford, was completely restored. Stuvé says of him: "He was zealously devoted to the best interests of the state, ever acting for the public good without regard to personal advantage or aggrandizement."

When Illinois was admitted into the Union a compact was made by which all lands sold within her boundary were exempt from taxation for a period of five years after their sale. After several appeals to congress the legislature gained its object, and finally, by act of February 19, 1847, it was provided that lands were subject to taxation immediately after their sale. By this act the revenue of the state was greatly increased.

In 1847 the Northern Cross railroad, now the Wabash, was sold. With these and other judicious acts by the governor and legislature the state continued in a prosperous condition, and in 1850 "for the first time since 1839, the accruing state revenue, exclusive of specific appropriations, was sufficient to meet the current demands upon the treasury."

It was in 1849 that the legislature passed the first township organization act, which was revised in 1851, and again in 1871.

After repeated advisals in Gov. French's messages, the legislature in 1851 passed an act to exempt homesteads from sale on execution. Toward the close of his administration quite an excitement was raised in Illinois and in the city of St. Louis by the latter's attempting, without permission from Illinois, to change the main current of the Mississippi river to the St. Louis side by constructing a dyke across the eastern channel of the river from Bloody Island to the Illinois side. A compromise, however, was ultimately made and the dyke was completed, and East St. Louis is the result.

In 1849 the Illinois legislature began and kept up for several years work on what was known as "State policy." The object of this state policy was that Illinois was to fix the termini of all railroads crossing the state, and that these should be placed so as not to build up cities of other states to the detriment of her own. One of the prime causes which first brought forward "state policy" was that Illinois had no disposition to assist in building up St. Louis, since it seemed she had so lately, in case of the "Bloody Island" dyke, been trying to take undue advantage of Illinois. But finally the narrow state policy gave place to a more liberal view, and when this was done Illinois had surmounted another obstruction which had checked her onward progress.

Congress, in September 1850, granted to Illinois 3,000,000 acres of land, for the completion of the Illinois Central railroad, which had originally been a part of the state internal improvement system of 1837. Not only the government, but the state, was vastly benefited by the building of this railroad. Immigration increased and the value of lands in the vicinity of the railroad advanced rapidly.

GOVERNOR MATTESON.

The democracy gained the victory in 1852, and Joel A. Matteson was made governor. He was born in Jefferson county, New York, August 8, 1808. He received a common school education, and prior to his settling in 1833 in Kendall county, Illinois, he had spent a good deal of time in traveling in the east and in the southern states. Upon arriving in Kendall county he opened a large farm. In 1836 he moved to Joliet, and in 1842 he was elected state senator.

Gov. Matteson had proved himself a very successful business man, and when the helm of the state was placed in his hand, he, by his liberal views and sense of justice, was amply fitted for his task.

Gov. Matteson, in his message, spoke at length upon the increasing advancement of the state. He recommended the building of a northern penitentiary. He also advocated the adoption of a free-school system; but it was not until 1855 that the law for maintaining free schools was passed.

The educational interests of the state began to advance rapidly under the working of the new school system. The proportion of pupils attending school increased rapidly, and the wages of teachers were advanced.

During Matteson's administration over $7,000,000 of the public debt was paid. The population of Chicago during this time was doubled, and about 2,500 miles of railroad were built in Illinois.

GOVERNOR BISSELL.

In 1856 Wm. H. Bissell was elected governor. He was born April 25, 1811, in Yates county, New York. After gaining a fair education he came west and located as a physician in Monroe county, Illinois. He soon found that he had mistaken his calling, and so began the study and practice of law. In 1840 he was elected to the legislature, after which time he was admitted to the bar. In 1846 he enlisted in the Mexican war, and was elected colonel of his regiment and greatly distinguished himself. Upon his return home he was elected to congress and served two terms in that office. A disease contracted by exposure in the army caused him to be unable to walk without crutches. His death occurred in 1860, nearly a year before his term of office as governor expired. Mr. Stuvé thus quotes from Gov. Palmer's funeral oration: "When it is remembered that Wm. H. Bissell, in the short period of sixteen years, without early educational advantages, abandoned, at the mature age of thirty years, one profession—quitting the dull and laborious routine of a country doctor and resolutely turning his attention to the profession of the law, as affording him a wider field for his active imagination and aspiring ambition; attained speedily at the latter eminence as an irresistible advocate; distinguished himself as a soldier; as an accomplished orator took front rank in the halls of national legislature; and, as the standard-bearer of a new party marching toward national freedom, was elevated to the first position of his state by the partiality of a grateful and confiding people, his life may be considered a brilliant success."

After Gov. Bissell's inauguration a stormy session of the house ensued. Logan made a speech which lasted two days, and which "in severity of language excels, perhaps, anything that that gentleman has ever uttered."

Another stormy discussion occurred in 1859 over the apportionment bill.

Gov. Bissell made many mistakes while in office which may in part be traced to the state of his health.

It was also in 1859 that the great fraud known as the "Canal script fraud" was discovered. The excitement subsequent to the discovery was greatly increased by the fact that the feeling of confidence and respect, which the people had had for Ex-Gov. Matteson, was suddenly reversed. Gov. Matteson, upon his retirement from office, was respected very highly indeed, but with the discovery of the frauds soon the public opinion was turned against him.

GOVERNOR YATES.

In 1860 the republicans of Illinois gained a grand victory. Lincoln was elected president of the United States, and Richard Yates governor of Illinois. Richard Yates was born January 18, 1818, at Warsaw, Gallatin county, Kentucky. His father moved to Sangamon county in 1831. In 1837 he graduated with the first honors from the Illinois college at Jacksonville. He afterward served three or four terms in the legislature. He held the chair of state during the most exciting term of four years that our country has ever seen. At this time he had the implicit confidence and trust of the people of Illinois, and his love for the Union led him to work always in its behalf. He gave a ready second to all the military efforts of the state. His proclamations and special messages are noted specially for the depth of feeling and elegance of expression portrayed. The civil events during Governor Yates' administration were not of very great importance. The time was mostly taken up by bitter party quarrels. Much party excitement prevailed during the constitutional convention of 1862, and again at the last democratic legislature of 1863.

GOVERNOR OGLESBY.

Again in 1864 the republicans of Illinois gained a victory and Richard J. Oglesby was elected governor. Governor Oglesby was born in 1824, in Oldham county, Kentucky. He was left an orphan at eight years of age, and when twelve years old came to live with an uncle at Decatur, Illinois. Here he, at various times, studied law and worked at the carpenter's trade, and at farming. He volunteered in the Mexican war, was elected first lieutenant of Co. C, 4th Illinois reg., and took part in the battle of Cerro Gordo. He has traveled considerably in this country, in Europe, and the Holy Land. He was elected state senator in 1860, but when the war broke out he was made colonel of the 8th Ill. reg. He was distinguished for his bravery in battle, and upon his partial recovery from an almost fatal wound, he was promoted to a major-generalship. His wound, however, led him to retire from active service in less than three months.

Notwithstanding the great draft of the war upon Illinois at the close of rebellion, in prosperity she was the peer of any state in the Union. This was the case, although at its beginning times seemed unusually hard.

Peace was made in 1865, and since then the elections in the state have, in general, had a republican majority. Ex-Gov. Yates was elected to the United States senate in 1865. Illinois was the first to ratify the 13th amendment to the constitution of the United States abolishing slavery. This legislature gave itself up quite thoroughly to the enactment of local and private laws.

The legislative session of 1867 continued through fifty-three days, and a very great amount of work was accomplished. Besides the passing of some very important public laws there were great contests over the location of the Industrial University, the Southern Penitentiary and the Capitol. The location of the Industrial University had been under discussion for two years, and in order for Illinois to reap any benefit from the act passed by congress July 2, 1862, this legislature had to decide upon a location. As Champaign county made the highest bid the University was located there.

Another absorbing topic was the new State Capitol building and its location. Several cities of Illinois, Peoria, the most earnest, were clamoring for the seat of government, but Springfield finally triumphed.

GOVERNOR PALMER.

John M. Palmer was elected governor in 1868. He was born in Scott county, Kentucky, September 13, 1817. His boyhood days were spent mostly in western Kentucky. In 1831 the family removed to Madison county, Illinois. In 1834, John, with his brother Elihu, entered Alton College and remained about eighteen months. In 1838 he formed Douglas' acquaintance, and soon after his purpose was fixed to study law. After studying by himself awhile he entered a law office at Carlinville. In 1843 he became probate judge, and in 1852 was elected to the state senate. When the war broke out he volunteered his services and was elected colonel of the 14th regiment. For his gallantry at Stone river he was made major-general. In February, 1865, he was made military governor of Kentucky.

Gov. Palmer has received great praise as to his abilities as a lawyer and as a statesman.

In 1870 the state constitution was revised. This was an important act and one which had long been needed. Many very necessary changes were made in it, and among other things the fees system to officers was done away with and fixed salaries substituted. The veto power of the governor was also strengthened.

GOVERNOR BEVERIDGE.

John L. Beveridge was elected lieutenant governor for four years, January 10, 1873. On the 23d of January, 1873, Hon. Rich. J. Oglesby resigned the office of governor, and on the 29th of the same month John L. Beveridge subscribed to the oath of office and entered on his duties as governor of Illinois.

GOVERNOR CULLOM.

In 1876 Shelby M. Cullom was elected to the governor's chair. He was born in Wayne county, Kentucky, in 1820, and in 1829 his parents moved to Tazewell county. When about twenty years of age he became a student in Mount Morris University, where he remained nearly two years. He entered the law office of Stuart & Edwards and was soon admitted to practice. He held the office of city attorney for one year, and in 1856 was elected to the legislature. In 1860 he was again elected to the legislature and became speaker of the house. He was elected to the 39th congress in 1864, and in 1866 was re-elected to the 40th congress, and took prominent part in all matters of public interest. He was again re-elected, in 1868, to the 41st congress, and became one of the leading members of the republican majority. He introduced the bill for the control of polygamy in the territories, known as "Cullom's Utah bill." He was elected to the legislature in 1872, and became speaker of the house. He was in the legislature again in 1874, and was unanimously the choice of the republicans as speaker of the house.

CHAPTER VIII.

ILLINOIS IN THE MEXICAN WAR.

WITHOUT going into all the details connected with the origin of this war we will simply say that it grew out of the annexation of Texas. Texas, after throwing off the Mexican yoke, had been clamoring for admittance into the Union for some time. The United States had at first declined her admittance, but at the presidential election of 1844 this was the great issue upon which the people divided. Pope was elected, and as he had been brought forward by the party in favor of the admission of Texas, there was no longer any hesitation and the "Lone Star took its place in the constellation of the states." As soon as congress had adopted the resolution to annex Texas, the Mexican minister at Washington left the country.

The union was completed when, on July 4, 1845, the Texan legislature ratified the act of annexation. Texas immediately asked the president for an army for protection. Accordingly, Gen. Zachary Taylor was sent to occupy Texas. Mexico, in rearranging her civil administration after the revolution of 1821, had united two frontier states east of the Rio Grande. Texas having gained independence naturally claimed Coahuila. Mexico also claimed the state and insisted that the river Neuces should be the dividing line, while Texas claimed the Rio Grande as the dividing line. Mexico scornfully refused the United States' proposition to settle the difficulty by negotiation, and accordingly it was felt that the Mexicans were in the wrong, and Gen. Taylor was ordered to advance as near as possible to the Rio Grande river. He therefore established a camp in November, 1845, at Corpus Christi. On the 9th of the next March the army began its march to the Rio Grande. Gen. Arista, having arrived at Matamoras and taken command of the Mexican forces on the frontier, notified Gen. Taylor, on April 26, that hostilities had begun, and on the same day a body of American troops was attacked by the Mexicans east of the Rio Grande. Upon the report of this attack reaching Washington, congress, with unusual alacrity, passed an act declaring war, appropriated $10,000,000 to carry on the war and authorized the president to accept 50,000 volunteers to serve in the war.

A call was soon made for volunteers. The western and southern states were expected to furnish the greater part of the men. Illinois was required to furnish three regiments of infantry or riflemen. The enlistments were for twelve months, and the selection of officers was left to the volunteers in accordance with the state militia laws. Gov. Ford, as commander-in-chief of the state militia, on May 25 issued his order to the militia officers to aid in both raising and organizing the regiments. The people of Illinois responded readily to this call, and great patriotism was soon manifest in various parts of the state. Martial music and patriotic speeches did their full share in rousing the people to their country's need. Thirty-five companies were organized in ten days' time, and there were forty companies more than the requisition required by the middle of June. As there were so many more companies than the requisition required many of the volunteers were disappointed. As soon as thirty full companies were in uniform they were ordered to attend the place of rendezvous.

On the 2d of July the first regiment of Illinois volunteers was organized. It consisted of two battalions, each of which was composed of five companies, commanded by five captains. Gen. J. J. Hardin was elected colonel. Capt. Wm. Weatherford was elected lieutenant-colonel and W. B. Warren, major.

The second regiment was organized and Wm. H. Bissell was elected colonel, Capt. J. L. D. Morrison, lieutenant-colonel, and Capt. H. F. Trail, major. The third regiment was organized with Capt. Forman, W. W. Wiley, lieutenant-colonel, and Sam. D. Marshall, major. The first regiment numbered 877 men; the second, 892; and the third, 906. The men presented a very fine appearance and there was but very little intoxication among them.

The secretary of war gave authority to Hon. E. D. Baker to raise another regiment of Illinois volunteers. It was composed of ten companies. E. D. Baker was elected colonel, Ex-Lieut.-Gov. John Moore, of McLain, lieutenant-colonel, and Capt. T. L. Harris, major. With such preparation, Illinois, having raised a larger number of volunteers than any other state in the Union, was ready to begin work in the Mexican war.

The American forces, for the purpose of invading Mexico, were organized into three divisions. The Army of the West was under Gen. Kearney, and was sent to conquer the northern provinces of Mexico. Gen. Scott commanded the Army of the Center, and was to march from the Gulf into the center of Mexico. Gen. Taylor, who commanded the Army of Occupation, was to subdue the country about the Rio Grande.

Instead of the Illinois regiments all being formed into one brigade, as many had desired, the first and second, under Gen. Wool, were sent to join the Army of the Center, while the third and fourth were assigned to the Army of Occupation. The first and second started down the Mississippi from Alton, July 17, and disembarked on Matagorda Bay. They started on their march across the tropical country to the San Antonio on the 11th of August. The northern men were almost overcome by the heat. On the 26th of September the army started on from San Antonio, crossed the Rio Grande at San Juan, after which the troops continued in a circuitous route to Monclova. Here they halted a month, and then the line of march to Parras was taken up. After some ten or twelve days' stay at this place, Gen. Wool left Parras to station himself at Agua Nueva, in the probable route of Santa Anna, who, it was thought, contemplated a descent, not only upon Saltillo, distant twenty miles from Agua Nueva, but upon all the ground for which the Army of Occupation had fought. Gen. Taylor now joined Gen. Wool at Agua Nueva, and on February 22, 1847, at the "Narrows," near the pass of Buena Vista, between Agua Nueva and Saltillo, was begun the most important battle of the war. In honor of the day Gen. Wool's troops' watchword was "The memory of Washington." Who will doubt but the memory of Washington was a grand stimulus to the Americans in this battle? Our Illinois men did nobly at Buena Vista, and many of the officers fell, among which were Cols. Hardin and McKee. Twenty-nine were killed out of the first and 62 out of the second regiments. After long and severe fighting on both sides, the Mexican forces retreated and the Americans bore the crown of victory.

The third and fourth Illinois regiments started down the Mississippi river the latter part of July, and arrived at its destination, Camargo, in the latter part of September. Upon landing at Vera Cruz, Gen. Shields' brigade, which consisted of the third and fourth regiments from Illinois and one from New York, with Gen. Pillow's brigade, succeeded in causing the Mexicans to retreat almost precipitately before them as they advanced. The complete investment of the city was made in a few days' time, but it was some weeks when, after a bombardment of some four or five days, the city surrendered.

On April 12, after a four days' march, Gen. Scott's army reached the pass of Cerro Gordo, where Santa Anna had concentrated a force of 15,000 men after the battle of Buena Vista. Santa Anna had so fortified this pass, that Gen. Scott considered their only chance of advancement to consist in cutting a new road which would unite with the national road in the rear of the enemy. The persistent Americans were equal to this difficult and unexpected labor, and the road was nearly completed ere the enemy was aware of it. After the completion of this road Gen. Shields brigade of Illinois and New York regiments, in the midnight darkness, performed the difficult task of lifting up "hundreds of feet," to the top of a height, a twenty-four pound battery.

The battle of Cerro Gordo resulted in another victory for the Americans, and it proved to be one of the most important in the war. Gen. Scott now had almost an open road to the capital of Mexico. This was the last battle in which Illinois troops took part. Throughout the entire time they were out, the Illinois troops did their part bravely and well. They have had much deserved praise showered upon them. All the Illinois troops returned home about the same time. Col. Hardin's remains were brought back and interred at Jacksonville. A six-pound gun was taken by the Illinois troops from near Santa Anna's headquarters at Cerro Gordo. It is now in the arsenal at Springfield and serves as a trophy of the Mexican war.

Previous to the return home of the Illinois troops two other regiments were raised. The fifth Illinois regiment was organized at Alton June 8, 1847, with E. W. B. Newby as colonel. Its destination was Santa Fé. Upon reaching Santa Fé, the war being almost over, the fifth Illinois regiment had no conflict with the enemy.

A sixth Illinois regiment was organized, with Capt. Collins as colonel, very soon after the organization of the fifth Illinois regiment. A division was made in the regiment, the first battalion being sent to Vera Cruz while the second did only garrison duty at Tampico. The first battalion did no fighting except some little skirmishes with Mexican guerrillas. Both battalions lost many men by sickness.

Several companies of cavalry were raised, and others authorized to be raised, when the report of the fall of the city of Mexico came. The treaty of peace between the two nations was concluded at Guadalupe, Hidalgo, February 2, 1848. The rivers Rio Grande and Gila were fixed as the principal boundaries between the countries, and at last the United States extended from ocean to ocean.

CHAPTER IX.

ILLINOIS IN THE LATE WAR.

“Oh, gales that dash th’ Atlantic’s swell,
 Along our rocky shore!
 Whose thunders diapasons well
 New England’s glad hurrahs.

“Bear to the prairies of the west
 The echoes of our joy,
 The prayer that springs in every breast—
 ‘God bless thee—Illinois!’

“Oh! awful hours, when grape and shell
 Tore through th’ unflinching line;
 ‘Stand firm, remove the men who fell,
 Close up, and wait the sign.’

“It came at last, ‘Now, lads, the steel!’—
 The rushing hosts deploy;
 ‘Charge, boys!’—the broken traitors reel—
 Huzza for Illinois!

“In vain thy rampart, Donelson,
 The living torrent bars;
 It leaps the wall, the fort is won,
 Up go the stripes and stars.

“Thy proudest mother’s eyelids fill
 As dares her gallant boy,
 And Plymouth Rock and Bunker Hill
 Yearn to thee—Illinois.”*

SUCH was the tribute to Illinois patriotism extended by a New England man upon hearing of the noble deeds of her (Illinois) soldiers at Fort Donelson. Illinois has well earned her tributes, and we are proud to acknowledge her, in ardor of patriotism, second to no state in the Union. In giving our prominence to Illinois in this article, we have no desire to underrate her sister states. Illinois is not the only state that stands to the front with her record of noble deeds. Illinois, in common with the other states of the northwestern territory, had, in the ordinance of 1787, designated her views in regard to slavery; so when that great issue came up, previous to the great rebellion, she still was for anti-slavery; and when finally the amendment making slavery forever impossible in the United States was passed, Illinois was the first of all the states to telegraph her approval to congress.

Slavery was the primary cause which led to the great civil war. The southern states, fearing that their institution of slavery would ultimately be overruled by the opposers to slavery in the north, resolved to secede from the Union.

After the bombardment of Fort Sumter, the first act in the drama of the rebellion, President Lincoln immediately issued a proclamation calling for 75,000 volunteers. Gov. Yates was informed that the quota of Illinois was six regiments, and on April 15, 1861, he issued the following proclamation:

“I Richard Yates, governor of the State of Illinois, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the constitution, hereby convene the legislature of the state, and the members of the twenty-second general assembly are hereby required to be and appear in their respective places in the capitol on Tuesday, April 23, 1861, for the purpose of enacting such laws and adopting such measures as may be deemed necessary upon the following subjects: The more perfect organization and equipment of the militia of the state, and placing the same on the best footing to render assistance to the general government in preserving the Union, enforcing the laws and protecting the property and rights of the people; also, the raising of such money and other means as may be required to carry out the foregoing object, and also to provide for the expense of such sessions.”

Enlistments began immediately after the call for troops was made, and in ten days 10,000 volunteers had offered their services, and near one million of money was offered for the cause of liberty. Only six regiments, however, could be accepted according to the quota, and these were designated by beginning with the number seven, in respect to the six regiments that served in the Mexican war. This entire force was styled the First Brigade of Illinois Volunteers. There were many more men than were accepted, and it is said that some of them wept when refused admission. By the time there was need for more troops the law provided that each congressional district should furnish one regiment. Over 200 companies volunteered at once, and from this number the necessary force was accepted. Under the next call for men only six regiments were again the quota for Illinois, and the patriotic state sent a messenger to Washington urging the acceptance of the entire force, which was ultimately done. At the close of the first year of the war, Illinois had in instruction over 17,000 men; had sent to the field about 50,000, thus exceeding her quota about 15,000.

In 1862, when the call for 300,000 volunteers came, and later, when 300,000 militia was wanted, Illinois was again enthusiastic, and the adjutant-general heard from all parts of the state a demand for the privilege of volunteering, that the draft might be avoided. It followed that in a very short time a great many volunteers were to be raised, and these must come principally from the farmers and mechanics of the state. "The farmers were in the midst of harvest, and it is no exaggeration to say that, inspired by a holy zeal, animated by a common purpose, and firmly resolved on rescuing the government from the very brink of ruin, and restoring it to the condition our fathers left it, that over 50,000 of them left their harvests ungathered, their tools and their benches, the plows in their furrows, and turning their backs on their homes, the demands of the government were met, and both quotas were filled. Proud, indeed, was the day to all Illinoisans when the announcement was made that the enlistment was full; and when the historian shall record the eventful days of August, 1862, no prouder record can be erected to the honor and memory of a free people than a plain and full narrative of actual realities. When I remember the patriotism and unselfish impulse which animated every soul, and the universal liberality of those who were either too young or too old to enlist, to aid those who were eager to join their brethren in the field; when I remember the holy ardor which aged mothers and fair daughters infused into husbands, sons and brothers,—I say, when I remember all these things, I cannot but feel justified in departing from the dull routine of statistics and bestow upon the subject this parting notice."

After the last call for troops, on December 19, 1864, permission was granted for the state to raise ten additional regiments. Many of the persons who had distinguished themselves in the war began each to raise a single company. Volunteers came in rapidly until April 13, 1865, when recruiting ceased throughout the United States, and at this time Illinois only lacked 4,896 of completing her quota. This number would soon have been raised had not the close of the war made it unnecessary.

The two principal camps in Illinois were those of Camp Butler, situated near Springfield, and Camp Douglas, of Chicago. Both places were provided with the necessary equipments for an extensive encampment, and it was from these camps, especially the former, that volunteers were prepared for, and sent into, the army, and that troops were mustered out of service. Prisoners were also kept at these camps. The site of Camp Butler now forms a part of a national cemetery.

Illinois had some trouble in obtaining arms for use during the war. At one time a messenger returned from Washington with orders to obtain 10,000 muskets from the arsenal at St. Louis. This was a difficult thing to do, as St. Louis was filled with traitors, but Capt. Stokes, of Chicago, volunteered to undertake the hazardous work. Capt. Stokes ordered a steamer down from Alton to reach the arsenal in the middle of one night. With some difficulty the muskets were seized and the steamer passed the secession battery and reached Alton by five o'clock in the morning. Fearing that he would be pursued, Capt. Stokes, as soon as he landed, rushed to the fire-bell and rang it with such vigor that the citizens came en masse to the river. Upon hearing the state of affairs, men, women and children began unloading the steamer and climbed up the levee with the freight to the cars. With these arms, thus narrowly rescued from the enemy, the first regiments of the state were made ready for the war.

It will be impossible in this work to go into detail and speak of the battles participated in by the men from Illinois. Suffice it to say that her sons did her credit wherever they were. "How much the nation is indebted to Illinois for the auspicious termination of the war may be inferred from the fact that in the two great movements which severed the insurgent states, and so greatly paralyzed their efforts, her soldiers were more largely represented than those of any other member of the Union. Furthermore, we must place on the credit side of her balance sheet a large amount of legal talent, superior generalship and executive ability; for Trumbull was our lawyer, Grant our soldier, and Lincoln our president."

After the grand review of the armies of the east and west, on Pennsylvania avenue, in Washington, the "mighty host" dispersed, and by regiments, returned to their homes. A joyous welcome home did Illinois give to her brave and honored victors in the great struggle.

Brilliant receptions were prepared for them and happy greetings were being exchanged everywhere. But alas! there were some who did not return for their welcome greeting. They died in their brave efforts in behalf of the honor and glory of their country, and passed to the home above, where their greeting is now waiting for the friends left behind.

CHAPTER X.

ORGANIZATION AND CONSTRUCTION OF THE PRINCIPAL RAILROADS OF ILLINOIS.*

THE Baltimore and Ohio and Chicago railroad was organized as the Baltimore, Pittsburgh and Chicago Railway Company, March 13, 1872, and in 1877 was changed to the present name. It was put in operation November 17, 1874, from junction of the Illinois Central railroad to Chicago Junction, Ohio, a distance of 262.5 miles. The proportion of the road in Illinois is 5.90 miles.

The Cairo and St. Louis railroad was chartered February 16, 1865, and the main line was put in operation from East St. Louis to Cairo March 1, 1875—a distance of 151½ miles. The road had been operated, however, as construction progressed, for two years previous. The aggregate length of all its tracks in Illinois is 161 miles.

The Cairo and Vincennes railway was organized under the general railroad laws of Illinois, July 9, 1880. The length of the main line, from Cairo, Illinois, to Vincennes, Indiana, is 157+ miles, 150+ miles of which are in Illinois.

The Chicago and Alton Railroad Company was organized at Chicago on October 16, 1862. The original name of this company was the "Alton and Sangamon Railroad Company," and the date of the original charter was February 27, 1847. At the time of the fourth act of amendment, June 19, 1852, the name was changed to Chicago and Mississippi Railroad Company, and at the third amendment after this change, and on February 14, 1855, the name was changed to the Chicago, Alton and St. Louis Railroad Company. By an act of January 21, 1857, the name was changed to St. Louis, Alton and Chicago Railway Company, whose railroad and property was acquired by the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company.

* From "Report of the RR. and W. Commission, 1881."

On April 5, 1870, this company purchased the unfinished road of the "Hamilton, Lacon and Eastern Railroad Company," and on September 5, 1879, the road and branch road of the Chicago and Illinois River Railroad Company was purchased. The former road was incorporated March 7, 1867, and the latter February 28, 1867. The following roads have been leased to the Chicago and Alton Railroad Company: The road of the Joliet and Chicago Railroad Company, incorporated February 15, 1855; the road of the Alton and St. Louis Railroad Company, incorporated February 4, 1859; the road of the St. Louis, Jacksonville and Chicago Railroad Company; the road of the Louisiana and Missouri River Railroad Company, incorporated March 10, 1859; and the roads of the Kansas City, St. Louis and Chicago Railroad Company.

The length of the main line of the Chicago and Alton road, from Chicago to East St. Louis, is 280.70 miles. The branch lines in Illinois aggregate 295.58 miles in length, while the aggregate length of all the tracks, including sidings, double tracks, etc., is 754.17 miles. The number of stations in Illinois is one hundred and fifteen.

The Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad, with its branches, is made up of several short lines. The Chicago and Aurora Railroad Company, which was first chartered June 22, 1851, and the Central Military Tract Company united their roads July 9, 1856, and formed the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy railroad. This company owns several branch roads, and the aggregate length of the main lines and branch roads in Illinois is 1,131+ miles, and there are one hundred and sixty-eight stations in this state.

The Chicago and Eastern railroad was first organized as the Chicago, Danville and Vincennes railroad, and was chartered February 16, 1865. Several changes and consolidations have been made in connection with the road, the last of which was on March 8, 1881, when the Chicago and Eastern Illinois railroad and Danville and Grape Creek railroad consolidated as the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroad Company. The aggregate length of track in Illinois is 177 miles, and the number of stations is thirty-five.

The Chicago and Grand Trunk Railway Company was formed by the consolidation of a number of railways under the laws of Michigan, Indiana and Illinois. The consummation of these consolidations was made April 7, 1880, and the present name was given to the corporation. Only 34.89 miles of the track lie within Illinois, but there are fifteen stations.

The Chicago and Iowa railroad was put in operation May, 1872, and was formed by the consolidation of the Ogle and Carroll County and the Chicago and Iowa railroads. The former was chartered February 18, 1857, and the latter March 30, 1869. The aggregate length of track in Illinois, including the leased line from Flagg Center to Rockford, is 115.93 miles, and there are twenty-two stations.

The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul railway was organized on May 5, 1863, under the name of the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company. The present name was given it on February 11, 1874. There are 295.77 miles of the track and seventy-four stations in Illinois.

The present Chicago and Northwestern railway was begun in 1848 by the Galena and Chicago Union Railroad Company, under a charter which dated January 16, 1836. The Chicago and Northwestern Railway Company was organized June 7, 1859. Many purchases, leases and consolidations have been made, and now the company owns 636.25 miles of track in Illinois, along which there are one hundred and twenty-one stations.

The Chicago, Pekin and Southwestern Railroad Company owns 92 miles of track in this state, and there are nineteen stations on the road.

The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railway Company was formed August 20, 1866, by the consolidation of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company, of Iowa, which was chartered February 7, 1851, and the Rock Island and La Salle Railroad Company, which was chartered February 27, 1847. The main line from Chicago to Rock Island was put in operation July 10, 1854. This company operates 397.51 miles of track, in Illinois, along which there are fifty-four stations.

The Chicago and Western Indiana Railroad Company was organized June 6, 1879. This line was open for operation to Twelfth street, Chicago, in December, 1880. It is made use of as a terminus into the city by the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railway Company, Chicago and Grand Trunk Railroad Company, and the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific Railway Company. In all there are only 48.38 miles of track and eleven stations in Illinois.

The Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago railway, in addition to several other roads, operates the Cincinnati, La Fayette and Chicago railroad, 33.05 miles of which is in Illinois.

The Danville, Olney and Ohio River railroad was chartered March 10, 1869, and was built first a narrow gauge, but was changed to the standard gauge. The length is 52.02 miles and there are fifteen stations.

The Danville and Southwestern railroad was chartered March 23, 1869, under the name of the Paris and Danville Railroad Company. The road was put in operation from Danville to Paris in 1872. There are 108.57 miles of track and thirty-three stations in Illinois.

The East St. Louis and Carondelet railway exists under a charter approved February 18, 1857. The main line was put in operation September 26, 1872, and the name was changed to the present one April 19, 1873. The aggregate length of tracks is 13.50 miles.

The East St. Louis connecting railway was put in operation October 28, 1879. The articles of incorporation were filed with the secretary of state of Illinois January 4, 1878. There are but 3.30 miles of track in the road.

CHAPTER XI.

THE ILLINOIS NORMAL UNIVERSITY.

THIS institution, located at Normal, Illinois, was founded by the act of February 18, 1857, and began operations October 5, 1857. The whole number of students who have received instruction since the institution was founded is about 7,000. The average attendance in the Normal department is 275, and in the Model department 175.

The university building is one hundred and sixty feet long, has three stories and a basement, and stands in a beautiful park of fifty-six acres, ornamented with fine evergreens and other trees. The original cost of the building was about $150,000. The lands and most of the cost of building was donated, of which donations, McLean county

THE SOUTHERN ILLINOIS NORMAL UNIVERSITY.

[From Illinois Legislative Manual.]

This institution was founded by act of the legislature, approved April 29, 1869. Its location was fixed at Carbondale by a commission appointed by Governor Palmer, and the corner-stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies May 17, 1870. The work of instruction began within its walls July 2, 1874. On September 6, 1874, the regular sessions of the Normal University commenced.

The building is brick, in the Norman style of architecture, with trimmings of sandstone in two colors. It is two hundred and fifteen feet in extreme length and one hundred and nine feet in width. It has a basement story, two stories, and a mansard story. The basement is devoted to the apparatus for heating, and for laboratory and dissecting rooms, exercises in unpleasant weather, and as a residence for the janitor. The mansard is for lecture hall, library, museum, art gallery and rooms for literary societies. The other two stories are for purposes of study and recitation.

The faculty consists of eleven professors and teachers, who have been selected from the best institutions in the west. There are also employed twenty-five or more pupil teachers or tutors. Rev. Robert Allyn, D.D., became principal about 1874. He had been at the head of several other institutions and was remarkably successful.

HISTORY OF PIATT COUNTY,

WITH

PERSONAL SKETCHES OF MANY INHABITANTS OF THE COUNTY.

“Temperance, morals, courteous bearing,
And the hand to help all round,
Each another's burden sharing,— Generous traits like these abound;
Energetic, self-confiding,
And religious and sincere,
Patient, duteous, law-abiding,—
Men like these are common here.”

THE HISTORIAN'S TASK.

DEDICATED TO EMMA C. PIATT BY WILSON F. COX.

A truly patriotic task, to hand
To future generations yet unborn,
The treasured annals of your native land,
Where grows the waving wheat and golden corn.

A truly patriotic task, to tell
Of hardy pioneers who, from afar,
Sought out the fertile land we love so well,
As led by “Empire's westward beacon Star.”

A truly patriotic task, to speak
Of times of danger, peril and of fear,
When oft was heard the agonizing shriek
Of victims of the tomahawk and spear.

A truly patriotic task, to write
Of times that tried the souls of bravest men;
When fond adieux were spoken by each at night
Lest they in life should never meet again.

A truly patriotic task, to teach
The story of those troublous times of yore,
That, filled with love and gratitude, we each
Due honor give those heroes for the scars they bore.

A truly patriotic task is yours,
To delve into the mysteries of the past,
And drag from thence the legendary stores,
Revealing deeds of bravery unsurpassed.

A truly patriotic task, to weave
In web historic, scenes of toil and strife;
Of dangers boldly met at morn and eve,
From lurking foes who sought each patriot's life.

A truly patriotic task, to blend
In story true, the struggles of our sires,
Who periled life and fortune to defend
Their country's honor, and their homes and fires.

A truly patriotic task, to wield
The pen (a weapon mightier than the sword),
Portraying deeds of bravery on the fields,
By which our glorious union was restored.

A truly patriotic task, to shed
Through hist'ry's page, the light that shall reveal
Those virtues of the brave and honored dead,
Which nought can tarnish, cancel or conceal.

A truly patriotic task, to trace
The course of progress in its onward way;
Annihilating distance, time and space,
And bending all beneath its mighty sway.

A truly patriotic task, to stand
Between the ages past and those to come,
Bind this to that, as with a magic band
Of sacred memories surrounding home.

PIATT COUNTY—ITS TOPOGRAPHY, AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS AND RESOURCES.

LOCATION.—Near the center of one of the richest and most influential states of the Union, and about midway between Chicago and St. Louis, the chief cities of central United States, is located the little county of Piatt. It lies right in the midst of the great agricultural region of Illinois, and the neighboring counties being influential in the state, thus aid in advancing the interests of Piatt county. McLean and DeWitt counties form the northern boundary; Champaign and Douglas bound it on the east; Moultrie forms the southern boundary, while it is bounded on the west by Macon and DeWitt counties.

Area.—Piatt county comprises an area of 438 sections, or 280,320 acres of land. This land is divided into eight townships, as follows:

Monticello Township.....	48 Sections
Bement Township.....	48 Sections
Sangamon Township.....	48 Sections
Unity Township.....	48 Sections
Goose Creek Township.....	56 Sections
Cerro Gordo Township.....	59½ Sections
Blue Ridge Township.....	64 Sections
Willow Branch Township.....	66½ Sections

According to the assessor's list of 1879, the acres and value of improved and unimproved lands were as follows:

Improved land.....	262,068 acres
Unimproved land.....	13,509 acres
Total value.....	$3,635,177

Within the last three years much of the formerly "raw" land has been improved, and the value of all the land has been greatly advanced. Preparations are being continually made for the improving of the low lands in the county. Tiling has already done much in this direction, but its value in preparing the soil for cultivation is not, as yet, half realized. It will not be long before every foot of soil in this county will be under cultivation.

Topography.—The physical features of the county are similar to those of the surrounding counties. However, the amount of timber and prairie land is probably more nearly equal here than in some of the neighboring counties. The surface, in the most part, is undulating, the northern part of the county, however, being more rolling than the land of the southern townships.

Hydrography.—In the main, the county has excellent natural drainage. A ridge, striking the county line a little north of Cerro Gordo and extending northeasterly through the county, passing between Bement and Monticello and extending into Champaign county, forms the water-shed between the Illinois and Kaskaskia rivers, both tributaries of the Mississippi river. From this ridge magnificent views of various parts of the county can be seen. A beholder, some sunshiny day in harvest time, standing on the ridge at a point east of Monticello, could ask for no grander view in any agricultural region of the state. The eye leaving the timber, which is visible as far as the eye can reach to the northeast, and turning slowly to the east and southeast, is first attracted by the undulating prairie, dotted everywhere with fast growing groves of trees. A protracted glance takes in the beautiful effect produced by the various fields of grain and corn, and a practical eye readily sees a “mint of money” literally growing on the ground. This is but an illustration of what may be seen at any point of the ridge.

A little north of this ridge, and coursing southwesterly across the county, flows the Sangamon river, through quite a belt of timber. The principal tributaries of the Sangamon on the north are Madden's Run, Goose Creek, Wild Cat Creek and Friend's Creek, which runs through a very small portion of the western part of the county. Camp Creek and Willow Branch are the principal tributaries on the south. The extreme northern part of the county is drained by Salt Creek, another tributary of the Sangamon. The southern and southeastern part of the county drains into the Kaskaskia through the West Okaw and Lake Fork of the Okaw. It is in the southeastern part of the county that the drainage is most inefficient. The fall of the country along the Lake Fork is very slight, and during the rainy season of the year acres of rich and valuable land are submerged. A movement is under foot now which we hope will be successful. It is proposed to deepen the channel of the Lake Fork in eastern Bement township and southern Monticello, or in other words dig a big ditch which will be of size sufficient to drain all the swamp lands in that section of the county. This is a want long felt and we trust the wished for result is near at hand.

There are a few living springs in the county. Probably the most noted of these is Coon's spring, on the south bank of the Sangamon, a little above the Marquiss ford. This is quite a resort, and serves alternately for camp-meeting and picnic grounds. Another spring near the Wabash railroad bridge, has also attracted pleasure seekers. From the bluff above this spring, probably the most beautiful view of the Sangamon in the county can be seen.

The main dependence of the people for water is in wells, and an abundant supply of excellent drinking water can be had at a moderate depth of digging. In some cases, upon boring for water, a seemingly exhaustless supply has been obtained.

Mounds.—Up the river, a little way from the spring just referred to, are a number of mounds, commonly known as Indian mounds. According to Mr. McAdams, of Otterville, Illinois, who has given "American antiquities" many years of study, it is impossible to definitely ascribe these mounds as being the work of the Indians, the "Pottery-makers," or the mound-builders, without an examination of the remains and implements which are now, or were once probably contained in them.

Climate.—In regard to the climate of the county we quote the following: "Closely bordered on the east by the vast forests of Indiana; sheltered by the fringes of forest that line the banks of the sinuous streams and the island-like groves of forest; located out of the direct route of the trade-winds from the southwest, though these are mildly deflected to us by the river forests of the Kaskaskia and Sangamon rivers, and little subject to the cold currents from the polar plains, that press down the valley of the upper Mississippi, making a variance in the isothermal lines that mark the several seasons," this county shows a more equable climate than most other parts of the country.

Agricultural Products.—"When the county was first settled the rank grasses presented an impediment to evaporation, and the result was a moist climate, that gave a too luxuriant growth to wheat and oats. This resulted in the lodging of the latter and producing rust in the former, but culture and pasturage have so modified these conditions that the latter is becoming one of our great staples, and the former, both in its spring and winter varieties, is becoming more and more popular as we learn better how to manage this crop."

The soil of the county is well adapted to the grasses, and there is often good grazing for nearly nine months in the year. Portions of many of the farms in the county have been used for no other purpose save that of grazing.

Sorghum has met with encouraging results in this county. The potato crop averages well. All cereals are at home on this soil; but the grand staple of the county is Indian corn. In all the fifty years since the first settlement of this county, the time has not been known when there was an absolute failure of the corn crop. Some large farms in the county are devoted entirely to the raising of broom corn.

Fruit.—This county produces as fine a quality of fruit as any tract of land of similar size in central Illinois. Many varieties of the apple and pear trees, and many varieties of the grape, blackberry, raspberry and other small fruits are grown. About every other year peaches of good quality grow in abundance. The several nurseries and many fine orchards testify to the fact that this is a fruit growing county.

In order to more fully portray the adaptability of this soil for agricultural products, we quote from the assessor's report of 1879 the following:

CROPS IN ACRES.

	Wheat.	Corn.	Oats.	Meadow.	Other Products.
Monticello.....	497	8,994	1,429	1,176	631
Bement.....	403	10,393	1,453	2,203	2,254
Unity.....	923	10,221	904	1,223	862
Cerro Gordo.....	1,203	14,969	2,199	2,391	1,597
Willow Branch.....	628	13,741	1,655	2,551	593
Goose Creek.....	486	12,289	2,392	1,750	1,311
Blue Ridge.....	264	21,465	3,505	3,152	704
Sangamon.....	1,000	11,371	1,555	1,781	1,473

According to the same report, in 1879 there were 44,153 acres of inclosed pasture; 2,274 acres in orchard; and 49,463 acres of woodland in the county.

Stock.—But a glance over the reports just given suffices to indicate that stock-raising must be carried on in this county. For fifty years this has been one of the great industries of the county. According to the assessor's report of 1882 the county contained 6,321 sheep; 10,064 mules and horses; 16,218 cattle, and 27,493 hogs; the aggregate value of the same being estimated at $564,238.

The grade of stock in the county is continually improving. In regard to cattle the short-horns seem to have the preference of the people, and consequently there are several herds in the county. The dairy stock is also improving. In this the Jerseys and Alderneys have the preference. The Berkshire, Poland China and Red-rocks or Jersey-red hogs are the principal improved grades in the county. Of horses, the draft stock has been principally in demand. Of late years several importations of horses have been made from Great Britain and France. Trotting horses have been introduced into the southern part of the county from a Kentucky grade of stock. The influence of these superior grades of stock for the road and for work has already been felt, and we are glad to note the increasing interest in this direction.

Markets.—Subsequent to statements relating to the agricultural products and the stock of the county; there comes a query relating to the markets and shipping facilities. In regard to railroad facilities this county is second to none in central Illinois. Not a foot of ground lies farther than six miles from a railroad; ay, and we are very near the truth when we say that every foot of land is within six miles of a railroad station. Five railroads cross the county in a general direction from east to west, making abundant facilities for marketing in the eastern cities. The railroad extending north and south through the middle of the county connects the rival cities of Chicago and St. Louis, and affords ample means for shipments to either place. We quote the following, showing the distance of Monticello from some of the neighboring cities and principal market places in the United States.

Manufactures, etc.—In manufactures, Piatt county is extremely limited. Agricultural implements, wagons, buggies, etc., are made, but in limited quantities. Brick kilns are in several parts of the county, while tile manufactories are becoming quite plentiful and very profitable. The county is well supplied with flour mills: Monticello, Bement, Cerro-Gordo and Mansfield, each contains mills, while there is a water-power mill about a mile north of Monticello, on the Sangamon river. There is a steam saw-mill in connection with the latter mill. Piatt county needs more manufactures. With its good railroad facilities we see no reason why almost any manufacturing establishment would not do well. Within the last year or two several tow-mills have been started, and with success. We are glad of it and trust that mills of various kinds will follow suit.

In the foregoing manner have we related some of the advantages, the resources and needs of Piatt county. No attempt has been made to overrate it, while we have conscientiously striven to give it due mention.

CHAPTER II.

GEOLOGY OF PIATT COUNTY.

THERE is an older history of this little speck of the vast globe which we call Piatt county than the traditions of the log cabin, or even those roving tribes that preceded the cabin, can tell us. For this oldest history we must look to the first and oldest settlers—the rocks. But the record of so small and uniform a space must necessarily be brief.

The great geological revolutions which have rent and upheaved and turned the strata in other portions of the globe by which the clue to that long dark past is discovered, seem not to have disturbed this locality; or, if such disturbances took place they have been carefully covered over and hidden by the peaceful action of later ages.

Beneath us may be the relic of an ancient sea-floor, overlaid by the traces of a vanished land surface, over which again the waters may have left marks of their dominion. There may be great coal measures with their buried forms of extinct vegetation. Perhaps there are traces of a sea-shore, where huge animals left the prints of their ponderous tread, or a tiny raindrop its impress, to tell us of its missive then as now. There may be indications of great forests, or vast marshes where gigantic reptiles floundered. But if there are such records they are sealed in that great tomb beneath us to which we have had, as yet, no admittance.

While the region around the great lakes and the Alleghanies were rearing their heads above the waters, as the forerunners of this great continent, this, with the adjoining counties of central Illinois, was a part of a vast ocean bed. Not until during what is called in geology the Carboniferous age is it supposed that it emerged from its watery depths. There are no formations to be seen, however, older than the Drift.

One vast age, the Tertiary, had begun and ended its unknown myriads of years, and another, the Quaternary, has begun since the Carboniferous, before what is called the Drift or Glacial period was formed. The phenomena representing this period seems to have been caused by a great refrigeration of the climate, which reached such a height that the whole continent north of 39 degrees was loaded with immense accumulations of ice and snow which overrode hill and valley, removing soil and surface material to the southward. In this way those large stones called bowlders scattered over the county are accounted for. They were carried here and left by the powerful glacier. Not only the bowlders are accounted for in this way, but the clay, sands and pebbles.

The survey taken of the county under the authority of the States in 1868 gives the following observations :

Appearance of the drift at the Sangamon river bridge near Monticello :

1. Yellowish-brown clay.....	5 feet.
2. Clay, sand and bowlders.....	5 feet.
3. Dark ash, brown clay, fine sand and pebbles.....	4 feet.
4. Black clay.....	1 foot.
5. Clay streaked brown and black and with ochrey red.....	8 feet.

Sangamon bluffs :

1. Brown clay.....	6 feet.
2. Pebbles and clay.....	10 feet.
3. At top dark-brown clay, below reddish brown finely commingled sand and clay.....	14 feet.

Between Monticello and Centerville the road washings disclose three to four feet of bright brown clay, sometimes brown sand, pebbles and bowlders. On the prairies there are bowlders of granite of various colors : gray, red, sienitic, granite, quartzite, and altered sandstone, gneiss and greenstone; and in the altered drift Devonian fossils and fragments of coal measure rocks.

Springs highly colored with oxide of iron are found. On Sec. 29, T. 19 N., R. 5 E., there are many such springs. Some of them are strongly chalybeate. In one gas arises, and a quantity of brown sediment is deposited on its sides, and it is marshy around. Some of the wells dug and bored from sixty to one hundred feet are supplied with a seemingly exhaustless amount of water. This great vein of water is thus reached at various depths throughout the county. In Goose Creek township a well was bored 120 feet, but the vein was not reached. On the fair-grounds it was reached at fifty-two feet. According to the state geological survey, in the northern part of the county, water is reached at a depth of from twelve to twenty feet. Bement, fifteen to thirty feet, and on the prairie near Monticello at from twenty to thirty feet. For surface water, wells in the timber are dug deeper than in the prairie, but 'tis vice versa in regard to the never-failing stream.

One of the wells dug in the county showed a fine deposition of conglomerate, supposed to have been from the bottom of Lake Michigan when its outlet was the Mississippi river. Pieces of wood have been found in various wells of the county. Mr. Jesse Warner reports a piece of wood resembling a crab-apple branch, well preserved, and at the depth of twenty-five feet. We might mention other similar remains of former geological periods, and we suppose there have been some depositions discovered which have not come under our notice.

CHAPTER III.

FLORA OF PIATT COUNTY.*

BY A. B. S.

THE object of this article is to give a list of the plants growing spontaneously in Piatt county. Such a list may be utilized in various ways. To the botanist, it answers the purpose of an elaborate flora, for, having a manual of botany, he can refer from that to the list or the reverse, and so has all the necessary information at his command. It greatly facilitates the study of botany to the beginner, for instead of having to find the place of any species among the two thousand six hundred described in Gray's Manual, covering all the Northern States, he has only to find its place among the few hundred growing in this county. It is also valuable as an index to the character of the region, its soil and capabilities of production. Woods, prairie, high ground and low, each has its peculiar vegetation, which the botanist recognizes at once.

In addition to the bare list, a few notes are given under the more important families, which it is hoped will increase its interest to the general reader. The common names are also given, when there are any, and the kind of place in which the plant grows.

The list is known to be incomplete, especially in certain groups such as the sedges and some genera of compositæ, and this is regretted, but is unavoidable, owing to the limited time available for making observations and collecting specimens. Additions will be welcome.

* Since this is not a scientific work, but only an ordinary one, a strictly scientific manner has not been followed in the printing of the following list of plants. The paragraphs following the name of the order are begun with generic names, while other scientific names in the same paragraph are names of species.

Ranunculaceæ—Crowfoot family. This family is notable for the simplicity of structure of its flowers. The parts are all inserted separately on the receptacle. In many species the corolla is wanting, in which case the calyx is colored like a corolla. The stamens are usually numerous and often the pistils also. The family is characterized by numerous stamens whose filaments are united into a tube, around the styles and at the base, to the cohering bases of the petals and several to many pistils which form in fruit either a several-celled pod or a collection of one-seeded carpels. The flower is often subtended by an involucre. A number of graceful cultivated plants belong here, and some not so graceful, such as the hollyhock. The family is largely tropical.

The climbing form, var. radicans, grows luxuriantly along the river near Monticello. It has recently been discovered by Prof. T. J. Burrill, of the State University, that bacteria constitute the poisonous property of this plant. They are minute vegetable organisms belonging with the lowest fungi. This plant, with its three leaflets, should not be confounded with the Virginia creeper, which has five.

Leguminosæ—Pulse family. Most plants belonging to this family have compound leaves, a papilionaceous or butterfly-shaped corolla, ten stamens and a single simple pistil. The corolla is composed of five petals. The two in front are usually more or less united and inclose the stamens and style. They form what is called the keel. The two at the sides are the wings, and the large one at the back is the standard. It incloses all the others in the bud. The filaments of the stamens are either all united or nine united and one free. The fruit is a simple pod or legume, but in a few genera it is jointed. This is a large and important family. It is widely distributed and in some regions the species are much more numerous than with us. There are many in the far west. Of six thousand five hundred species known in the world, the United States has three hundred and fifty, Illinois seventy-three, Piatt county twenty-four. Compositæ—Composite family. To this family belong all such flowers as the asters, golden-rods, daisies, sunflowers, thistles and many others. Many flowers are collected together in a head, and, to those who have not studied them, may appear like a single flower. In the sunflower, for instance, each of the parts that appears like a petal is a flower, and each of the parts in the central part or disk is a flower, perfect and complete in itself. The former are called ray flowers; the latter, disk flowers. The green leaf-like bodies outside of the ray flowers form, not the calyx, but the involucre. Each flower has its calyx, which takes various forms in different species. In the sunflower, it consists of a few teeth; in beggar-ticks, the teeth are barbed; in the thistle, dandelion and many others, it is composed of many fine hairs. The calyx is called the pappus. The corolla is usually fine-parted. In the disk flowers it is regular; in the ray flowers, strap-shaped. Some species, as ironweed and boneset, have no ray flowers; but in one whole sub-family, that to which the dandelion belongs, the flowers are all strap-shaped. The stamens, five in number, are inserted on the corolla and their anthers united into a tube around the style. The style has two branches. The fruit is a one-celled ovary containing a single erect seed. This is the largest family of flowering plants: it contains about a thousand genera and ten thousand species. In Illinois there are two hundred species. It contains a comparatively small number of directly useful plants, the commonest being lettuce. Many are cultivated for ornament.

Filices—Ferns. The leaves of ferns are called fronds. The stems on which they grow are usually subterranean, but in some foreign species they grow erect and appear above ground, growing to a height of from a few inches to many feet, and thus becoming tree-ferns. Ferns have no flowers, but on the backs or margins of the fronds are formed many minute spore-cases in clusters, and each of these contains many seed-like bodies called spores, which are too small to be seen with the naked eye. Under proper circumstances a spore will germinate and form on the surface of the ground a heart-shaped leaf-like expansion, a quarter or half inch across. On the under surface of this, organs corresponding to the stamens and pistils of flowers are formed; they unite their products and form an embryo from which a fern develops like the original one. About two thousand five hundred species of ferns are known in the world, a hundred and fifty of which grow in North America; thirty-seven in Illinois. Some of the most beautiful ferns in the world, as the maiden-hair and the lady-fern, grow in Piatt county.

CHAPTER IV.

FAUNA OF PIATT COUNTY.

PROBABLY but few of the inhabitants of the county appreciate the value of a knowledge of its natural history. We are apt to look upon the study of insects, birds and plants as a pastime, rather than as a useful and profitable employment; but the sooner we become acquainted with nature the sooner will we be prepared to utilize her bounties and obtain the greatest benefits from the advantages she offers us, and to meet difficulties with nature's own means. For instance: a few years ago, about 1854, there first appeared in the county an insect known as the "potato-bug." It gradually increased in numbers until the raising of potatoes was almost an impossibility. "Bug pickers" and paris-green would never have annihilated the pest, for there were enough who did not care to spend the time and means to preserve the crop and so surrendered their potato-patches as breeding-grounds. While bugpickers and poison were doing their feeble work, there came to our relief two or three species of insects that silently did a powerful work, and now have almost rid the country of that pest. It is true the little "lady-bug" and squash-bug have done their work of destroying eggs and young potato-beetles in spite of our indifference to them, but may it not be that in many cases we may assist these insect friends by becoming acquainted with them? Many birds, as the quail and swallow, destroy millions of chinch-bugs, flies, etc., every season. The poor snake is persecuted on every hand, because of the curse laid upon him in the Garden of Eden, in spite of the fact that he has labored faithfully ever since that time, destroying thousands of mice, grub-worms and insects every year. If we could overcome our prejudice for these unfortunate creatures, and instead of ruthlessly killing every one we see, let him go his way in peace, we would assist very greatly the means nature offers us in destroying pests to crop raising.

The rattle-snake is the only poisonous serpent in the state, in spite of those blood-chilling names so miscellaneously applied, as adder, viper, copperhead, etc., and now there are very few rattle-snakes in the state. These are some of the practical purposes for which we should become better acquainted with the animal life of the county. Then there is another side, in cultivating observation, comparison, and appreciation of life, but we will leave that side for our schools and leisure hours, and look only to the practical side.

Before the county was settled the buffalo and black bear might have been found on the prairies, or in the forests along the Sangamon, when the red man alone claimed the soil; but they have all fled at the approach of civilization, leaving only trails, bones, etc., to tell of their existence here. The Virginia deer were not all exterminated until a few years ago. In 1869 a deer was run through the public square of Monticello. Badgers also were found when the first settlers came, but have all disappeared. As early as 1833 there disappeared a beautiful bird of the parrot family. Carolina parroquet, and the wild turkey now found in many parts of the state was once an inhabitant of the county. The Canada lynx and wild cat were found up till 1860 and the wild boar was abundant formerly.

Among the carnivorous animals of the Dog family, or Canidæ, now found in the county are :

The gray or prairie wolf, Canis lupus; red fox, Vulpes fulvus; gray fox, Urocyon cinero-argentatus.

Mustelidæ, or Weasel family.

Common weasel, Putorius ermineus; mink, P. vison; otter, Lutra canadensis (very rare); skunk, Mephitis mephitica.

Procyonidæ—Raccoon family.

Raccoon or "coon," Procyon lotor.

Of the Vespertilionidæ or Bat family we have at least two species :

The little brown bat, Vespertilio subulatus, and silver black bat, V. noctivagans

Talpidaæ, or Mole family, one representative :

The prairie mole, Scalops argentatus.

Rodentia, or gnawers.

Sciuridæ.—Squirrels. Flying squirrel, Sciuropterus volucella; fox squirrel, Sciurus niger; gray squirrel, S. carolinensis; chipmunk, Tamias striatus; striped gopher, Spermophilus tridecemlineatus; gray gopher, S. franklinii; woodchuck, Arctomys monax.

Muridæ—Mice family.

Leporidaæ—Hares.

Gray rabbit, Lepus sylvaticus.

Of Marsupialia, one representative :

The opossum or "possum," Didelphys virginiana.

The number of species of birds found in the county during the year is too great to give here, except a few of the most important. There are a great many birds that pass through the country in the migrating season, stopping only a few days to take food, but as they come and make us a visit once or twice a year, we may regard them as part of the fauna just as well as those that come to remain all summer and rear their young. Not half enough can be said in favor of these little songsters that come every spring to help the farmer by destroying insects, worms, etc. There are perhaps one or two exceptions to this, and perhaps only one worthy of mention: I refer to the English sparrow. It is becoming a great nuisance everywhere. These birds live upon grain instead of insects, and are driving out the useful birds. The streets of our towns and cities are full of these little brown robbers, and it is quite probable that before long means will have to be taken to destroy them.

Of reptiles, fishes and insects, and the lower forms of animal life, such a limited number of species have been identified that we can notice only a few without giving even a partial list.

There are at least three turtles—the snapping turtle, painted or mud turtle, and the soft-shelled turtle.

There are no lizards, but there is a lizard-like reptile called a salamander (Amblystomea punctatum), and which is usually called a lizard by those not acquainted with it; but it is nearer related to the frogs than to the lizards. If there is a representative at all of the order of lizards it is the so-called glass snake — another misnomer. It resembles a snake in having no limbs, but upon examination it will be found that it has movable eyelids, while the true snakes have not. By the popular tradition this reptile will break into pieces by a slight blow and then crawl together again, while the truth is, it has a very long tail in proportion to its body, and when the animal is excited the muscles of the tail become very rigid and so brittle that they break like glass by a slight blow; so that only the tail breaks off and the animal crawls away without it. It is perfectly harmless and can be handled without fear.

Among the snakes proper there are the black snake, blue racer, fox snake, milk snake, three or four kinds of garter snakes, water snakes, and formerly two kinds of rattle snakes; the latter being the only poisonous snakes in the country, no matter how terrible or threatening they are. The snakes, though valuable aids to the farmer, are fast disappearing on account of a barbarous custom, so universally practiced, of killing every snake that is so unfortunate as to be found in our reach.

Of batrachians there are probably a half-dozen representatives. Besides the salamander above spoken of, there are two or three frogs, the toad and the mud puppy.

The fishes are represented by two species of cat-fish, buffalo-fish, one or two sun-fish, bass, pike, perch, and gar-pike. It is very probable that many times this number may be found, but little has been done with them.

Years of labor would not exhaust the insect world of a square mile of the county chosen at random; but a little investigation and well-directed study will give one a good understanding of at least those insects most injurious to crops, and the insect enemies of the same. To be able to treat of them properly, one must know something of their nature and habits.

The Colorado potato-beetle (Doryphora ten-lineata) appeared in about 1854, but as stated above it has nearly disappeared, owing largely to its many insect foes.

The "wild potato-bug" (Lytta marginata), comes occasionally, and can be driven off by switching the vines.

The cabbage butterflies (Peiris), and especially the species rapæ — a small white butterfly — is now a great pest to cabbage growers.

The cut-worm is the larvæ or young stage of a little gray moth; and another the larvæ of a beetle which we call the June bug or May beetle. The former is the brown grub that cuts off young corn ; the latter a large white grub.

The ground squirrel destroys a great many of the beetles. One beetle will lay hundreds of eggs in a year, so the ground squirrel, though he may destroy a few hills of corn, may save many a hundred by killing the beetles.

The army-worm (Leucanium unipuncta), is also the larvæ of a small gray moth.

The chinch-bug (Micropus leucopterus) is probably the worst pest to the farmer. It was first noticed in this county in 1844.

Other injurious insects are the Hessian-fly, curculios, etc.

The lists of species is a very small one indeed, and it is to be hoped some one will complete the work by making a note of the species not contained in the above.

CHAPTER V.

CUSTOMS OF THE OLDEN TIME.

“There are gains for all our losses,
There are balms for all our pains,
But when youth, the dream, departs,
It takes something from our hearts
And it never comes again.”

THESE few lines contain a germ of truth, and one of the reasons that the old settlers of the county look back with longing eye and throbbing hearts to the days of “Auld Lang Syne.” The youthful eye of the pioneer saw bluer skies, and greener trees, than the aged eye now sees ; the luxuriant grasses waved to gentler breezes ; cooler, clearer water from rippling brook or refreshing spring laved his heated brow, or quenched his ardent thirst ; his quickened ear caught sweeter strains in the nesting-songs of the feathered tribe, and when twilight closed the busy day he was “lulled into pleasant dreams by happy toil.” Such is some of the glamour which youth sheds over the “good old times.” However it was not all poetry, the early days in this county. There was a stern and practical side to the life of every pioneer. Trials and hardships found their way into each home. But interwoven with this life of simple pleasures, primitive joys, of alternate smiles and tears, of undiminished labor, there are many life lessons which we of later days would do well to pause and ponder.

Directed by the faithful, sturdy hand of a dear old man, whose cheerful presence yet gladdens many homes of the present time, let us gaze backward into the past and glean some of the gems from Memory's treasure-house. Lured on by whispered tales of the abundant resources and future greatness of the new states, the first settlers of this county left their timber-bound homes of Ohio, Kentucky or Indiana and drifted with the tide of immigration into the great "prairie sea." No doubt, had their pen been as mighty, they would have said of Illinois' magnificent prairies, as Bryant :

"My heart swells while the dilated sight
Takes in the encircling vastness. Lo, they stretch
In airy undulations far away,
As if the ocean, in its gentle swells,
Stood still, with all his rounded billows fixed
And motionless forever."

Nurtured under the protecting forests of their native states, the immigrants sought timbered land for their new home. In fact it was years after the first settler came to this county ere it was known that prairie soil could be successfully cultivated. Upon reaching the water-courses of the county, the timbered region, the new comers pitched their tent, and with their ax, "the first weapon of offense against the forests," began to fell trees, thus clearing land for cultivation, and at the same time preparing to build the primitive log cabin of the county. For years after the first settlements were made in the county, all the men living therein collected together to aid in the raising of each new cabin. These cabins were usually from 14 to 16 feet, and rarely twenty feet, square. They were usually built in the following manner: "First-large logs were laid in position as sills; on these were placed strong sleepers, and on the sleepers were laid the rough-hewed puncheons which were to serve as floors. The logs were then built up till the proper height for the eaves was reached; then on the ends of the building were placed poles, longer than the other end-logs, which projected some eighteen or more inches over the sides, and were called "butting pole sleepers"; on the projecting ends of these were placed the "butting poles," which served to give the lines to the first row of clapboards. These were, as a matter of course, split, and as the gables of the cabin were built up, were so laid on as to lap a third of their length. They were often kept in place by the weight of a heavy pole supported by what was called knees, which was laid across the roof parallel to the ridge-pole. The house was then chinked, and daubed with coarse mortar."

In the first cabins of the county huge fire-places, occupying nearly the entire end of the room, were built. These were large enough for persons to sit in chairs on either side of the burning fire, and being entirely within the fireplace they could look up the chimney and out at the sky above. At these fireplaces our mothers cooked, and our fathers tell us that the bread from the "dutch-oven," the corn bread from the "pone" board, the venison from above the coals, and the potatoes from out the ashes, were sweeter far, and formed more delicious food, than any of the dishes of modern device.

In a few of the first cabins in the county, a log being left out of one side, sheets of paper greased with "coon grease" covered the opening and feebly let in the daylight to the inmates. Nearly all the furniture of these first cabins were "home made." A single puncheon board with four legs projecting from the underside formed the dining table, and blocks of wood on three legs were their chairs. The bedstead corresponded with the rest, and sometimes was made with but two poles united at a right angle, and projecting into the side and end of the room. Boards resting on this framework formed a spring bed compared to the hardness of the puncheon floor.

Come with me for a moment and we will take a peep into one of these primitive cabins, after more modern furniture came into use. Here we are on the hewn threshold of the one door, which is in the south side of the house. The latch-string, which is "always out," is drawn and the wooden latch lifts with a sharp click. Slowly the massive door swings back from the generous opening and we in truth see some of the charms of "ye olden time." In spite of carpetless floor, limited space and crude furniture, there is an air of comfort about the interior that cannot be denied. After our return we will relate our experience and what we saw in the cabin. At first our entire attention was attracted to the fireplace on the west side of the room, and we saw verified Whittier's twilight scene in "Snow-bound." We saw "The oaken log, green, huge, and thick,

And on its top the stout back-stick;
The knotty forestick laid apart,
And filled between with curious art

The ragged brush ; then, hovering near,
 We watched the first red blaze appear,
 Heard the sharp crackle, caught the gleam
 On whitewashed wall and sagging beam,
 Until the old, rude furnished room
 Burst, flower-like into rosy bloom.
 * * * * * * * *
 Shut in from all the world about,
 We sat the clean-winged hearth about,
 Content to let the north-wind roar
 In baffled rage at pane and door,
 While the red logs before us beat
 The frost-line back with tropic heat ;
 And ever, when a louder blast
 Shook beam and rafter as it passed,
 The merrier up its roaring draught
 The great throat of the chimney laughed.
 The house-dog, on his paws outspread,
 Laid to the fire his drowsy head.
 And, for the winter fireside meet,
 Between the andirons' straddling feet,
 The mug of cider simmered slow,
 The apples sputtered in a row,
 And, close at hand, the basket stood
 With nuts from brown October's wood."

Sitting there in the mystic light from this charmed fireside we gazed about the room. The sand-scoured puncheon floor reflected the fire-light to wall and ceiling. Chairs, stools, benches and chests were scattered about the room. Three curtained beds with narrow pass-ways between, and mayhap a trundle bed beneath, stood with heads to the east at the back part of the room. Under the spotless curtained windows—the one at the west and the other at the north of the room—stood a stand and dining table. In the corner to the left of the fire-place an old-time cupboard rested against the wall. Rows of blue and white plates lined the uncurtained shelves, while a huge onion or a ripe tomato ornamented the top. High over the fireplace the narrow mantle with its medicine bottles, candlestick, and what not, rested ; while, at various places about the room, boards resting on sticks driven into auger holes formed shelves for bedding and other things. The pioneer's friend and weapon of defense, his gun, rested on wooden hooks fastened to the centermost joist of the ceiling. Hanging on wooden pegs against the wall in the back part of the room were the "linsey woolsey," drawstring tow, or eight-yard calico dresses, of the economical and thrifty women, of the household, and the stocking-pole or line found its place in the corner of the cabin. The spinning wheels, both large and small, had their place in the corner of the room. From the joists and about the wall, dried herbs of various kinds were hanging. From these, soothing beverages were made by the family nurse of the home—the good house-wife—for healing the wounded and curing the sick. On peeled hickory poles resting on pegs driven into the joists there hung numberless rounds of dried pumpkins and strings of dried apples.

While viewing all these numerous articles we sat in the midst of the inmates of the house. With genuine pleasure and good will beaming in their kindly faces, they had made us welcome and with generous hand and open heart had entertained us well.

As we reluctantly left this genial home and turned our steps to a modern one, we thought along the years from then till now—the old days to the new, and we grievously saw many dear old customs that had gradually dropped out of use, so that perhaps but a shadow of their influence reaches the present time.

Very much of the free-hearted hospitality which used to make each cabin a home to the stranger is gone. There is less of the genuine neighborly feeling which existed between the early inhabitants of the county. In the early days here there was not much need for lawyers; the good-natured judgment of the pioneers quietly settled all disputes. There was a simplicity of demeanor, and a wonderful amount of genuine upright integrity in the character of the pioneer, whose counterparts are seldom found in the character of people of to-day.

There is one thing of which the early settlers of the county all had an equal share,—they all had a generous portion of poverty. It being a common article no feeling of degradation accompanied it. However, they had one comfort,—what little they did have was their very own. They lacked many of the conveniences of life and some of what now seem necessities, but with patient hearts and laboring hands they toiled on, hoping for brighter days.

The first settlers did most of their farm work with oxen. The ploughs first brought here were of little use in breaking the grass-matted prairie soil. This was a drawback to the cultivation of the latter, after the truth was made clear that the prairie soil would grow grain as well as the timber ground. When the county was first settled the nearest sawmills were on the Wabash river, and some of the houses are yet standing, the lumber of which was brought from the banks of the said stream. The Wabash region and Sangamon county furnished the grist-mills for a number of years. The groceries came from the same regions, while the salt mines of Vermilion county were frequented. These, too, were the market-places, while many hauled their grain all the way to Chicago and exchanged for groceries. It has not been over thirty years since a family in this county hauled peaches in a wagon to Chicago and sold them. For a number of years all blacksmithing was done outside the limits of the county. It would be utterly impossible to give an accurate idea of all the suffering and hardships undergone by the people living under such inconvenience.

The people on coming to make a new settlement were generally prepared with breadstuffs and groceries to last until a crop could be raised. Corn-meal seemed to be the staple article of diet. Johnny-cake and ponies made of this were relished for breakfast and dinner, while mush-and-milk or "hasty pudding" was the usual dish for supper. The "truck-patch" contained about the same kind of vegetables we find in modern ones. All kinds of wild fruit were plentiful. Honey was found in great abundance in the forests, and maple sugar was successfully made, though the sugar camps were never as extensive as those in more eastern states. Wild meat was very plentiful. Venison and wild-turkey meat abundantly supplied their tables.

The thrifty housewife of the early days of the county not only kept her house neatly and in order, cooking for a large family, and oftentimes for a whole wagon-load of travelers, but she manufactured nearly all of the clothing worn by the family, and made much of the bedding. Many women in the county are yet using blankets woven by their own hands. "Linsey-woolsey" was made into winter gowns for the women, while blue and butternut jeans suits were worn by the men. The men, too, often wore buckskin shirts, and, in fact, entire suits of the same. The early settlers upon coming to the county found the Indians here, and some of their athletic sports were copied. Most of the sport in way of games were those testing muscular strength or the skill with the gun and bow and arrow. Shooting matches were sometimes indulged in.

The first settlers were located, some of them, miles apart, but they were never too far to refuse to obey a call to a house-raising, log-rolling or corn-husking. "We're going to raise to-morrow," was all the invitation needed to obtain abundant assistance to erect a cabin.

For a number of years after the first settlement was made in the county, the inhabitants made yearly preparations for the sickly or ague season, which usually began about August and lasted several months.

During this time often the entire household would be "shaking" at one time, and neighbors who lived at a distance of from sixteen to twenty miles willingly left their home work to minister at the bedside of sick friends.

One great annoyance to the settlers in the early days of the county was land speculators, who often entered land before the settler who anticipated entering it could get time to travel some seventy miles to the land office. One instance is already recorded relating the fact that one of the ladies now living in the county rode horseback to Danville, swimming the Vermilion river on the way, and reached the land office, entered her land, and walked out of one door of the office just as the speculator came in at the other.

In such way have we related some of the manners and customs of the long ago. If by such relation we have succeeded in pleasantly recalling to some of the old people of the county their early days here, we will feel amply repaid for our labor.

CHAPTER VI.

PIATT COUNTY.

"Sweet clime of my kindred, blest land of my birth!
 The fairest, the dearest, the brightest on earth,
 Where'er I may roam, howe'er blest I may be,
 My spirit instinctively turns to thee."

PREVIOUS to the coming of the first white settlers to this county, the small portion of the state now known as Piatt county served no higher purpose than as grazing land for herds of deer and buffalo, and as camping ground for the Indians during the hunting season. The buffaloes disappeared ere the coming of the whites, leaving as evidence of their habitation here some decaying bones, and a portion of some of their trails to the water-courses. A small part of one of these trails can yet be seen about half a mile west of Mr. McIntosh's mill on the Sangamon river.

The deer remained long after settlements began, and, in fact, some were seen in the county not over sixteen years ago. These timid, graceful creatures were the pride, as well as the chief support of the early settlers of the county. They furnished much of the sport, too, for the old as well as the young. Deer hunts were greatly in vogue, and the children spent days in playing with their pet fawns. Some of the old settlers have at hand many jokes and incidents relative to the deer hunts of their youthful days. Most of the early settlers were hunters, some excelling the others, however. "Uncle Nath" Henline was always a hunter and we expect him to remain one for many years to come. Mr. Simon Shonkwiler has killed many a deer, while "Uncle Joe" Moore has well earned his sobriquet of "Buckskin Joe." "Uncle Ezra" Marquiss is one of the few early settlers who spent very little time with the gun. He sometimes relates his early disappointments in that direction and his subsequent decision to spend his time at something else. He never killed a deer in his life. Dr. Hull was a noted deer hunter in his day here. The Maxwells, just beyond the line, in Champaign county, were the companions of Mr. Henline and others of the early settlers in their hunting expeditions. Joseph Mallory says that he shot his first deer December 9, 1835, on what is now Mr. Thomas Reid's place. He was in company with William Piatt, and the latter undertook to have his nag carry both himself and the dead deer. Upon crossing a little stream and when the horse went to drink, he was so frightened by the deer's legs swinging and striking him, that both the deer and Mr. Piatt were tossed into the stream. Many other similar incidents might be related which would but serve to emphasize the fact that the hunting was a hard necessity, yet once in a while a little sport tempered the hardness.

Wolves were at one time—and are still in some parts of the county—a great annoyance to the early settlers. Many ways and means were devised for exterminating them. They were chased with bloodhounds, were dug from their lairs, and in some cases were caught in traps. Mr. Piatt has seen the remains of a wolf trap supposed to have been erected by Mr. Daggott, which had the skeletons of deer and wild hogs which had been used for bait scattered around it. According to Mr. Henline the wolf traps were made similar to those for prairie-chickens. The bait was so fixed that, when the wolf jerked it, the lid of the trap came down and the wolf was a prisoner. Some of the ladies in the county had a little share in wolf and deer hunts. One lady, now living in the county, told us how astonished she once was to have a wolf bound over the fence, alighting at her side as she stood in the garden. From the garden the wolf went from one lot to another and then lay down in the pig-pen to rest. The neighbors with their dogs were out on the trail, and as the barking of the dogs began to be heard plainer, the wolf started from the hog-pen and ran in another direction. In the meantime, and ere the men came in sight, the lady referred to had mounted a horse and was quickly off, taking the lead in the chase and witnessed the killing of the wolf by the hounds. Several equally interesting incidents are remembered by the pioneers. The howling of the wolves was one of the disagreeable sounds the people had to listen to in the early days. Some of the now men and women can yet, in imagination, hear the frightful noise as it sounded in their childish ears.

Indians in the county.—Indians of various tribes used to pass through and camp in Piatt county, but the Pottawatomies and Kickapoos frequented the place more than any others. Mr. Henline was well acquainted with many of these Indians. They taught him their language, their arts of hunting and trapping, and the use of snowshoes. Shabbona, the peace chief, has been in the county, and Mr. Henline knew him. He was also acquainted with Shaw-nes-sah, an under chief of the Pottawatomies. Mr. Henline assisted in opening an Indian grave—that of a chief in the war of 1812,—near Coon spring, and he yet has some of the trinkets taken from it.

There was one old Indian, named Capt. John, who wintered for several seasons just a little west of the Wabash cattle-yards, near Monticello. He considered Mr. James Piatt's folks, who lived in a cabin just north of the depot in Monticello, his friends. One summer Indian John wanted to stay and plant corn, and Mr. Piatt showed him ground on the present site of Monticello where he could plant. John, however, wanted to plant in the pasture, but upon Mr. Piatt's assuring him the horses would eat it he went off contented, returning in the fall to find a fine lot of corn on the ground he would not use. He pointed to the corn telling what a patch of corn he had. Mr. Piatt told him to go cut it, but the old Indian only laughed adroitly and turned away. Just before the Black Hawk war, this Indian went to Mr. Piatt and bade him good-by, telling him that there was going to be war.

One morning several Indians called at Mr. Piatt's for food. Although it was after breakfast time Mrs. Piatt gave them a good meal. While in the house one of the Indians saw a book on the shelf and took it down, asking William Piatt to read for them under the trees in the yard. The latter read until the Indian reached for the book and began to read as well as William, after which he drew forth a Testament from his pocket.

At the time that Mr. James Piatt was helping Mr. Fry to build his cabin, an Indian came out of the woods and beckoned to Mr. Piatt, who was on the house. He got down from the house and followed the Indian, who presented him a part of a deer in remembrance of the time Mr. Piatt fed him during the war of 1812.

Part of the land Mr. Piatt owned in and about Monticello was paid for by money received from Indian agents. At one time five or six hundred Indians on their way west were camped in his neighborhood and he furnished the agents provisions for them.

A pond several miles north of Monticello commemorates the name of a Delaware brave. A Delaware squaw killed two Kickapoo children and was sentenced to death. An Indian married her to save her life and she was banished. Her husband chose banishment too, and they settled in the fall upon the banks of the Sangamon river. Upon the rising of the river they moved back just above a pond on C. W. Piatt's place. Here the squaw was taken sick and her husband gave her steam baths by pouring water on hot stones, but to no purpose, for she died. Nathan Henline was a boy at this time and was at the burial. The grave was dug on the bank of the pond, puncheon boards were placed therein, and into this rude sepulcher the body was placed. The next morning old Buck and his ten-year old son, Calish, started to camp, and ever since the pond has been known as Buck's pond. Some time after the burial of the squaw a band of Kickapoo Indians passed through this section of the country, and the grave was robbed of its dead,—the bones were scattered on top of the ground. A number of years afterward the Marquiss boys found the old squaw's skull and took it home with them. Traces of the grave are yet visible.

Organization and name.—At the time of the first settlements in what is now Piatt county it was a part of Macon and DeWitt counties. About 1837 the people located here began to think themselves too far off from the county seats, and they decided to try to have a new county struck off. Accordingly a meeting was held to see what could be done to advance such decision. The result was that Isaac Demorest and William Wright were instructed to carry a petition, which was made out by George A. Patterson, in Champaign county, for the purpose of getting some portion of it for the new county. Abraham and Ezra Marquiss and William Barnes were to canvass DeWitt county, while George A. Patterson, James Piatt and John Piatt were to work in Macon county and over the southern part of what is now Piatt county. The canvassers in Champaign county accomplished nothing, but the others succeeded in getting their petitions quite well filled out, and George A. Patterson was appointed to lobby in the legislature for the formation of the new county. Mr. Patterson called a meeting at the house of Abraham Marquiss for the purpose of deciding upon a name for the probable county. Isaac Demorest proposed the name of Webster, and made a speech in its favor, while William Barnes proposed that of Piatt, and spoke at length in favor of the same. Only seven or eight votes were cast and Piatt gained the day by a majority of about one vote. Mr. Patterson went to Springfield, and wrote a letter to 'Squire Wiley, January 7, 1841, from which we quote the following: "I have become acquainted with many of the members and my business is favorably received. The petitions were introduced New Year's day, and referred to the committees on counties. I had the privilege of drawing the bill and with only one amendment it was presented and read yesterday for the first time. One gentleman has hinted that he would propose to alter the name of our county to that of Grundy, but I have opposed it, because we agreed to have no party political name, and so the name of Piatt will be sustained."

The result of all this was that by an act of the legislature in January, 1841, Piatt county was formed. The following, from the "Laws of Illinois for 1841," defines the boundaries of the said county:

"Be it enacted by the People of the State of Illinois, represented in the General Assembly: That all of that part of Macon and DeWitt counties, included within the following boundaries to-wit: Beginning where the north line of town fifteen, north, intersects the middle of range four, east, and running thence north through the middle of range four to the middle of town nineteen; thence east to the west line of range five; thence north to the northwest corner of town nineteen, north, range five, east; thence by a direct line to the southwest corner of section seven, town twenty-one, north, range six; thence east to the east line of range six; thence south along the east line of range six to the north line of town fifteen, north; thence west along the north line of town fifteen to the place of beginning, shall constitute a new county of Piatt."

After the county was thus organized, Monticello, which had been laid out and named in 1837, was chosen as the county seat. At once the first county election, in April 1841, was held, and John Hughes, W. Bailey and E. Peck comprised the first county commissioners' court. Hon. Samuel H. Treat presided over the first court held May 14, 1841. Joseph King was made the first circuit clerk; James Reber, probate judge, and John Piatt, sheriff.

For a number of years the county was divided into the following precincts: Liberty, Monticello, Sangamon and Okaw, and the people living therein, voted accordingly. In 1861 the present organization into townships was made.

First settlements.—It seems that the southern states, though in some cases in a roundabout way, were the first to send settlers to our little county. Mr. Hayworth, who came in 1822 and built the first house in the county, moved from Tennessee to Illinois, with a colony of Quakers. Mr. James Martin, who settled here in 1822 and built the second house, was formerly from Kentucky, but he moved to Ohio, thence through Indiana and to Piatt county. Mr. Henline's people, who settled here in 1824, were originally from Kentucky, but moved from Ohio to Illinois. Mr. York, who moved to this state from Kentucky, was formerly from North Carolina. Thus, at the outset, the characteristic element of the southern people—hospitality—was implanted on Piatt county soil. Soon other people came in from Indiana, Ohio, and other states.

In 1822 Mr. Daggott bought Mr. Martin's improvements, lived on the place a short time, and then deserted it, moving to Big Grove, Urbana. About the same year Mr. Daggott came, Mr. Holliday reached Piatt county. On his way here he stalled, and had to remain a day or two in a big slough east of Lynn Grove. The place was known for a number of years as Holliday's Hole. Upon reaching the county he built a cabin a little southwest of Mr. Hayworth's, on land that is now a part of Monticello. Mr. Solomon Carver bought Mr. Holliday out, and in 1829 William Cordell bought the property and moved on to it. Just previous to this, however, Mr. James Piatt, while traveling through Illinois, stopped over night with Mr. Carver. Upon hearing that Mr. Hayworth wished to sell out, Mr. Piatt went to Danville, bought him out, and in 1829 moved his family from Indiana to the Hayworth cabin, a picture of which appears in this book. In 1830 the father of William Cordell, built the first house on what is now Madden's Run. He afterward sold out to Mr. Stout, and the stream was known for a time as Stout's Branch. In this same year (1830) Mr. David Cordell built a cabin on what is known as the Woolington place. Previous to this, however, in 1824, Mr. York built a cabin near Mr. George Varner's present residence, and this was the first house on Goose creek. It is said that in 1830 these last two cabins mentioned were the only ones on the north side of the Sangamon river, between Friends Creek and Cheney's Grove. Mr. York lost his wife here, and returned to Kentucky. Mr. Cordell moved to Friends Creek and thence to Missouri. In the fall of 1830 a Mr. Fry put up a cabin north of the mouth of Goose creek, on what is now Mr. Fithian's place. In this same year (1830) Mr. Terry came to the county and built two cabins, one for himself and one for his mother-in-law, Mrs. Randolph, in the southern part of the present fair grounds.

These people, so far as we can learn, are all who settled in Piatt county previous to the deep snow of 1830-31. During the next decade settlements were made quite rapidly.

Soon after the deep snow, probably in the fall of 1831, Mr. Olney, a captain in the revolutionary war, came to the county and built a cabin on what is now Mr. Ezra Marquiss' place. His son-in-law, Mr. Lawrence, began building the cabin which afterward became "Uncle Ezra's" first house, a cut of which appears in this book. One of Mr. Olney's sons took possession of the house vacated by Mr. Fry, while the other built a cabin on the site of William Piatt's present residence. Old Mr. and Mrs. Olney died here and were buried at Hickory Point, just opposite Mr. Oliver Marquiss' present residence. Their remains were long afterward disinterred by a grandson and placed in the burying ground near the Piatt school-house. The Olneys became dissatisfied with the county and moved away. In 1833, when Mr. Abraham Marquiss with his family came to the county, he took possession of the cabin that stood where William H. Piatt's present residence is, which was vacated by one of the Olneys.

During the decade from 1830 to 1840, settlements began to be made rapidly. During the first half of this time Mr. Abraham Marquiss, Ezra Marquiss, William Barnes, John and Richard Madden, Samuel Olney, Joseph Mallory, Isaac Williams, Samuel Suver, Cyrus Widick and Michael Dillow settled in the county. About the middle of the decade the Aters, the Baileys, James Hart, Jesse, William and Richard Monroe, James Utterback, Joseph and Luther Moore, Ezra Fay, Daniel and Samuel Harshbarger, Simon and Nathaniel Shonkwiler and Samuel Havelly, came to the county. Not far from 1840 Abraham Collins, John Tenbrook, Samuel West, A. J. Wiley, A. Rizeor, John Argo, John Welch, William Smock, Peter Adams, George and Silas Evans, the Armsworths, the Coons, Dr. Burrill, and a number of others, settled in the county. Some of these early settlers of the county are yet living, but others have ended their worldly career.

Prominent among the settlers at this time, in the neighboring counties, we will first mention Mr. Henry Sadorus, who came with his family and made, in 1824, one of the first settlements in Champaign county. Mr. Sadorus was born in Bedford county, Pennsylvania, in 1783. He married Mary Titus in 1811. He served thirteen months in the war of 1812, but never received his pension. In his last years he became ambitious to obtain it, but his last illness prevented the signing of the papers. Upon Mr. Sadorus' settling at the grove, which still bears his name, his house became a regular stopping place for all travelers bound for Macon and other counties west. Several people now living in this county are ready to affirm that the meals prepared by Mrs. Sadorus seemed the best they had ever eaten. This family was hospitable in the extreme and too great credit cannot be given them for their good deeds. Mr. Sadorus was married in 1853 to Mrs. Eliza Canterbury. In this connection we will mention an instance referred to in Lothrop's History of Champaign County. At an early day here horse-thieves were quite annoying. Mr. James Piatt having lost three valuable horses started in pursuit, and he and Mr. Sadorus, after several days' ride, caught the thief with his prize. Although the prisoner was handcuffed, he made several attempts to escape as they were on the way to the sheriff of Macon county. At each attempt of escape made by the prisoner, Mr. Sadorus dropped a bullet into his gun, and when the thief was safe in the sheriff's hand only "twenty-nine balls" were found in the gun.

The Dickeys, of Macon county, were also kind neighbors to the people of this county. Mr. Wm. Dickey, a native of Alabama, settled on Friends Creek about 1828 or 1830, and lived there until his death a few years after. His son John died while on his way to Chicago with produce for the markets. Several descendants of these men are yet living in Macon county. The Howells, some of whom now live in Piatt county, were in Macon county a long time. The Maxwells, of Champaign county, were also friends of the people in this county. A number of other people, both in these and surrounding counties, might be mentioned, which would also serve to show that the pioneers of this county were not without friends.

The majority of the people now living in the county are Americans, but within the last twenty years a number of English, Irish and German settlements have been made here, and they all bid fair to become among the very best of our citizens.

First births and deaths in the county.—The first white child born in the county was that of a family of movers, who, at the time, were camped near Camp Creek bridge, near where Mrs. Raymond now lives (1881). This family only remained in the county a month or so. The next child born after that of the movers was a daughter of Mr. Henry Sadorus, born at Mr. James Piatt's house in the spring of 1830. Jacob Piatt, born in January, 1831, was the first male child born to white settlers in Piatt county. Frank Williams, daughter of Isaac Williams, who came to the county in 1835, and Mary E. Monroe (now Mrs. Gamaliel Gregory), were probably the next children born in the county.

There was a walnut tree, which stood on an island a little below the Bender ford of the Sangamon river, which for fifteen years was known as the "coffin tree." The several first people who died in the county were buried in coffins made by the neighbors from this tree. The first coffin, according to Mr. Henline, was made for Mrs. Martin, and the same tree furnished coffins for Mrs. Randolph, Mrs. Terry and Mrs. Olney. The coffin of the latter named person was in good condition when taken up thirty years after. These people—except Mrs. Olney—were buried a little southwest of Rhoades Park, in Monticello. Mrs. York, Mr. Holliday and Mr. Ayers also had coffins from the tree and were interred in the same place. No trace of this burial-ground now remains. This tree just referred to was used for other purposes. Mr. Abraham Marquiss and Ezra Marquiss made a good table out of it, and Wm. Piatt made several bedsteads from the same tree.

The "deep snow" and "sudden freeze" mark two eras in the history of Piatt county which were not soon forgotten by the inhabitants of the county at that time. "The deep snow is one of the landmarks of the early settler. It is his mile-stone, from which he counts in dating preceding or succeeding events. He reckons the date of his coming to the county, his marriage and the births of his children from it." "You may locate a certain event as occurring Anno Domini so-and-so, and your ante-deep snow resident will at once commence counting on his fingers the intervening years between the deep snow and the particular time in question in order to verify your date. The fact is, that the deep snow was an important and very extraordinary phenomenon. There has been nothing equal to it in this latitude for the last hundred years—if the Indian traditions are correct as to what occurred before the white man's advent. According to their traditions, as related to the first settlers, a snow fell from fifty to seventy-five years before the settlement of the white people, which swept away the immense herds of Buffalo and elk that then roamed over our vast prairie.”

Early in the fall of 1830 the snow began to fall, and continued to fall at near intervals through the entire winter. Frequent sleets with the snows formed alternate layers of snow and ice, which was from three to four feet deep on the level. The weather was intensely cold throughout the season, and the snow did not melt. It was drifted in places so that the fences could not be seen. For weeks people were positively “snow-bound,” and did not venture forth except to prevent starvation. As the season advanced and the snow became packed, teams drawing heavily loaded wagons were driven right on top of the snow and over stake and rider fences.

Wild game was very easily captured that winter. The deer being unable to travel through the snow were often caught without the aid of fire-arms. For several seasons following that of the deep snow, deer, prairie-chicken and other game were very scarce.

After this great snow began to melt as the warmer season advanced, the country was almost deluged with water, and for weeks it was nearly as difficult to travel about the country as it was in the winter.

We understand there was no one perished in the snow of that fearful winter, but we have heard several tales of the hardships undergone by the settlers of the county. At this time there was one little hand-mill in the county at Mr. Henline's, and all their neighbors had to struggle through the snow to use this one mill to prepare the “breadstuff.” One old settler relates the fact that, when a boy, he was detailed from his family to carry grain or “breadstuff” to a family across the river to keep them from starving. He wore nothing on his limbs but buckskin breeches, and as he came over the point of the bluff reaching the prairie not far from where Mr. Woolington now lives, the cold wind from off all that prairie of deep snow would blow his clothes and strike his now and then unprotected knees with such force as to almost paralyze him with cold.

But at last this dread season came to an end, and not another such has been experienced by the inhabitants of the county since.

January of 1836 marks the era of the “sudden freeze.” This resulted in more loss of human life than did the deep snow, and, from the suddenness of the storm, there was probably more intense suffering for the time being. Some of the incidents related in regard to this storm seem almost incredulous, but when we hear so many tell the same kind of stories, we know all could not be mistaken. For a time preceding the storm the ground had been covered with snow, but upon the day in question, the rain falling during almost the entire forenoon had made with the snow a "slush" several inches in depth. The storm came from the northwest and reached this county some time in the afternoon. The cloud appeared dark and threatening above, while below it had a white frosty appearance and the air seemed filled with particles of frozen mist. Almost instantaneously the climate seemed changed from that of a temperate to a frigid one. The change came so rapidly that one could seemingly see the slush congealing, and the feet of chickens, hogs, sheep and cattle were held ice-bound in the frozen slush. Mr. Ezra Marquiss describes the day in the following manner: "It was raining the fore part of the day and I had been gathering hogs. I reached home about ten o'clock, ate my dinner, and started out to see how the weather looked. As I went out of the south side of the house, which was 16 x 13 feet square, it was still raining. I walked slowly to the west side of the house to find it snowing, and by the time I had reached the north side the slush on the ground was frozen over." He further remarked: "The second or third day after the 'freeze' a hired man and I started to take our horses over to Salt Creek to be shod. Father helped us to start and we got the horses over the creek — which was from bluff to bluff — quite easily, by carrying ashes and scattering for them to walk on; but when we reached the prairie the horses could scarcely move in some places. In order to get them over sloughs and ponds one of us would take hold of the bridle-rein and pull while the other would push the horse; but though the start was made early in the morning, and notwithstanding the pushing and pulling, night found us only half way over — about five or six miles from home. We left the horses standing on the icy plain and returned home for the night. In the morning we returned to the horses, and the remainder of the journey seemed less difficult."

William Piatt was pitching hay with a pitchfork when the storm struck him. Almost instantly, it seemed to him, the handle of the fork, which had been wet with rain, was covered with ice.

Nathan Henline says he was riding when the storm reached him, and before he had gone a mile the frozen slush would bear up his horse.

Mr. William Monroe, while going with Mr. James Utterback to East Fork, was so nearly frozen that when he reached a neighbor's he had to be helped off the horse. His clothes were actually frozen to the hair of the horse.

At the time of the sudden freeze Jacob and Samuel Deeds were frozen to death while on their way to West Okaw. Mr. Joseph Moore says that these men had been over to the Lake Fork timber hunting hogs and had started home. It was twelve days before their bodies were found. There were several other deaths of people who were neighbors to the people of this county.

Early mills.—Mr. Henline says they used to prepare their cornmeal in what was called a hominy block. This was made by making a hole about one and a half feet deep in a block of wood three feet long and from two to two and a half feet in diameter. A block of wood with a wedge in it was then fastened to a pole with one end fastened to a joist of the cabin. The hominy block was placed under the sweep, which when forced to the bottom of the block in pounding the corn therein, would spring back to its original position. The finest part of the pounded corn was made into bread while the coarse part was used for hominy. The next arrangement for preparing cornmeal was a hand mill. Mr. Henline's folks bought two stones that were about sixteen inches in diameter. These were fixed in a section of a hollow tree and the top stone had a hole in it in the center and one near its circumference. A staff was fastened with one end in the outer hole, and the other to one of the joists of the cabin. By taking hold of the staff a rotary motion could be made by the top stone. Only a handful of corn could be put into this mill at a time, and it took about three men to grind three bushels of corn a day.

Mr. Wm. Monroe thus describes the making of the first mill Unity Township had. "When we returned home after the sudden freeze, Mr. Christopher Mosbarger, who was a millwright, and who had brought his tools along, was at our house. We were without bread-stuff, and he said to us: "Boys, get your axes and grub-hoes and cut the ice, and by gracious, we makes a mill with prairie 'nigger-heads.'" All went to work and in about four days a mill was made. This mill was afterward moved from Mr. Jesse Monroe's to where Atwood now is, and was run by horse-power, grinding ten to twenty bushels a day.

The first large mill in the county was a water-power mill, built about 1838, near where Mr. McIntosh's mill is now located. It was owned by the following named men, who comprised the stock company:

Major McReynolds, James Piatt, Abraham Marquiss, William Barnes, Mr. Sadorus and William Piatt.

Early administration of justice.—The pioneers usually found a way, and sometimes 'twas a way peculiarly their own, to punish persons for their misdeeds. There was a famous rail-pulling in Macon county about 1831, in which many persons from what is now Piatt county participated. Some movers passing through the county stopped, upon invitation, for lodging at the house of a man who was living on government land. At this house the mover was advised to enter some land. He accordingly left his family with these hospitable people and went to a land office and entered the very land his new acquaintance was living on; and more than this, he returned and ordered him off the place. The one who really had the best right to the place quietly left the cabin and built another on some land of his own, and notified his neighbors of the rascality of the man he had befriended. 'Twas enough! People to the number of one hundred collected one night from Sadorus Grove, Salt Creek, what is now Piatt county, and Macon county, and planned to move the improvements to some land on which the new cabin was and which had been entered by the man who had befriended the mover. A captain was chosen and the "rail-pulling" was fairly begun, when the guilty party made his appearance and a compromise was made. The company contentedly dispersed to their several homes.

Several years later a company was organized for the purpose of administering justice in cases that the law could not well get hold of. Among themselves they were known as "The Calithumpians." They were in organization eight or ten years and 'tis thought they did a good deal of good with tar and feathers; for, while some were quite severely punished for misdeeds, others were afraid to do wrong. The captain and first lieutenant of the company are still living in this county, and the chaplain is now preaching in Kansas.

Judiciary, county officers and some of the election returns.—Hon. Samuel H. Treat, now judge of the United States district court, presided over the first court in a room of the "Old Fort" or Devore House. The first four terms of court did not occupy one half a day. Hon. David Davis, who is now vice-president, was the second judge of this district. He was succeeded by Hon. Charles Emerson, of Decatur, who presided nearly fifteen years, and though "a man of few words, was very highly revered." He died in April, 1870. Hon. A. J. Gallagher was the next judge, and his ability for judging points was great. Few of his decisions were reversed. After six years he was succeeded by Hon. C. B. Smith, who says he held the first term of court in Piatt county in 1873, and has held nearly every term in the county since. Judge Smith is a native of Virginia, and received a portion of his law education under Governor Benjamin Stanton, of Ohio. In the last few years Judge Nelson, of Decatur, has held a few terms of court in the county.

James McDougal, who has since been United States senator from California, was the first prosecuting attorney. He was followed successively by David Campbell, Mr. Rust, John R. Eden, afterward congressman from Illinois; Col J. P. Boyd, D. L. Bunn, M. V. Thompson, Samuel R. Reed, Albert Emerson and Charles Hughes.

The names of the probate justices and county judges are as follows: James Reber, John Hughes, James Ater, A. G. Boyer, H. C. McComas, G. L. Spear, Hiram Jackson, William McReynolds and W. G. Cloyd.

Dr. Joseph King, the first county clerk, was followed by the following persons successively: Dr. J. D. Hillis, James F. Outten, J. L. Miller, Wilson F. Cox, J. A. Helman, Watkins L. Ryder, John Porter and A. L. Rodgers.

James Reber, J. C. Johnson, A. G. Boyer, L. J. Bond, William T. Foster and William H. Plunk, are the names in succession of the circuit clerks.

For quite awhile the sheriffs acted as treasurers. The first treasurer elected was N. E. Rhoades, followed by S. E. Langdon, J. T. Vangundy, Nelson Reid and Theodore Gross.

John Piatt was the first sheriff of the county, and the following men succeeded him in the order of their names: Edward Ater, Charles Harris, George Heath, Samuel Morain, G. M. Bruffett, Peter K. Hull, Reuben Bowman, F. H. Lowry, E. P. Fisher, W. B. List, George Miller, John Kirby, William H. Plunk, E. P. Fisher and William N. Holmes.

The following are the names of the county school commissioners and superintendents: Joseph King, William H. Piatt, George A. Patterson, Joseph Kee, Thomas Milligan, John Huston, J. W. Coleman, Caleb A. Tatman, C. J. Pitkin, Mary I. Reed and G. A. Burgess.

The following men have been masters in chancery: A. G. Boyer, A. T. Pipher, S. R. Reed, E. A. Barringer and Albert Emerson.

James Reber, the first county surveyor, was succeeded by George Heath, James Bryden, C. D. Moore, William McReynolds and C. D. Moore, in succession.

The subjoined results of some of the elections in the county will serve to show the companions in the number of voters in the county in various years :

Ruby, of Bement township; David Moyer, of Willow Branch township; John Kirby, of Goose Creek township; A. J. Langley, of Blue Ridge township; W. Mossgrove, of Sangamon township; W. L. Pitts, of Cerro Gordo; and J. A. Hawkes, of Unity.

Lincoln.—Even a history of this little bit of the state's territory cannot be written without an allusion to this great and good man—to Abraham Lincoln. During the first years after the organization of the county he came to Monticello for the purpose of practicing law. McDougal, Kirby Benedict, C. H. Moore and Mr. Gridley, were also lawyers here during that time.

In 1856, during the presidential campaign, Lincoln came to Monticello to make a speech. The speaking was to be in the court-house, and when the time came to proceed to said place, only two persons could be found who were willing to walk with Abraham Lincoln through the streets and to the court-house. These men were Ezra Marquiss, Sr., and Joseph Guy, who carried the flag. The speaking began, with these two men for audience, but gradually the number increased until the court-room was nearly full.

During the senatorial campaign in 1858, a very different greeting awaited Lincoln, who was called by his party to speak at Monticello. A procession, nearly a mile long, came down from Champaign county, and another delegation arrived from DeWitt county, with the Piatt county delegation in addition. A magnificent display was made as the throng proceeded to meet Lincoln as he came from Bement. Douglas, who had just fulfilled the appointment made by his party for him in Monticello, met Lincoln on the hill, one mile south of Monticello, and, according to Judge Spear, they arranged to meet at Bement, in F. E. Bryant's house, upon Lincoln's return to the place. At the time of their meeting arrangements were concluded for the great senatorial debate, which soon followed.

In the procession that went to meet Lincoln were carried many banners with suggestive mottoes. One was: "Cham—paign for Abe; real pain for Dug." After the crowd of some five thousand persons reached the old park, just west of Monticello, Lawrence Weldon, of DeWitt county, made the first speech. Lincoln followed him with a two hours' concise and logical speech. Dinner was sumptuously served in the park. Altogether 'twas the greatest day Piatt county had ever seen.

It seems almost incredible that so great a change could come over the public sentiment of the people of the county during two short years. In 1856 the people would scarcely pause in their work to look at him, while, in 1858, they were ready to literally carry him in their arms.

The press.—Mr. James D. Moudy was the editor of the first paper in Piatt county. A copy of this paper, which was printed in November, 1856, and called "The Monticello Times," lies before us, and in it we notice the advertisements of some of the men who are yet in business in Monticello. Mr. Moudy, who only edited the paper a short time, sold out to Mr. J. C. Johnson, who published the paper under its original name for a time. He sold out to Mr. James Outten, who edited it under the same name for a time. He then took Mr. Hassett as his partner and the name was changed to "The Sucker State." Messrs. Gilliland and Tritt bought these men out and were running the paper in 1859. Thomas Milligan succeeded them, and edited "The Conservative" until 1862. At this date W. E. Lodge bought him out and edited the paper until 1864. During a part of this time J. M. Holmes assisted him. Mr. Lodge sold out to N. E. Rhoades and the paper was conducted under the auspices of the Union League. Mit. A. Bates was the editor and publisher during the political campaign of 1864, and the paper was called "The Piatt County Union."

Mr. James M. Holmes was the next person to buy the paper, and he printed the first copy of Vol. I of "The Piatt Independent," November 23, 1865.

Mr. Holmes published this paper under the same name for about seven years, and then changed it to "The Piatt Republican." At the end of about three years Mr. Holmes sold to Mr. Wagner, who immediately sold out to H. B. Funk, and in 1876 the paper became known as "The Monticello Bulletin." After running the paper four or five years Mr. Funk sold out to Messrs. Mise and Wagner, who in turn sold to Mise Brothers. In 1882 Mr. Funk again bought the paper, and under his present able management we have reason to expect a good paper for the people.

In 1874 H. D. Peters came to Monticello and began work on "The Herald," which was under the management of Scroggs and Peters. Soon Mr. Peters became both editor and publisher. He has been successful in his work, and still furnishes a very good paper for the county. For the following items incident to "The Bement Press," we are indebted principally to Judge Spear and Mr. Eli Drum.

In April, 1860, Mr. James Shoaff, of Decatur, and Mr. Outten, began publishing the "The Bement Union," in Freese & Co's warehouse. Mr. Shoaff made his editorial farewell in the paper of April 18, 1861, and went to the army. After this Mr. Sanches served as publisher for several months, when the paper was discontinued. The next editors in the town were John Smith and John S. Harper, after which Mr. Mit Bates started "The Farmers' Advocate." J. H. Jacobs next published "The Bement Register," and was succeeded by Mr. Connor. On the first day of January, 1878, Mr. Ben Biddlecome issued the first number of "The Independent." This paper was begun under unfavorable circumstances, but for several years made its way quite well. "The Independent" was followed by "The Bement Gazette," published by F. E. Bills. "The Bement Gazette" was next started by J. I. Chilson, who sold out to Mr. Eli Drum, the present editor of the paper. A citizen of the town remarked that this was Mr. Drum's first editorial effort and that he was "getting along finely."

Cerro Gordo had one newspaper, "The Cerro Gordo Times," edited by J. H. Jacobs, but it was discontinued long since.

Some pioneer physicians in the county.—The very first settlers of the county were their own physicians. They were herb doctors, though a few had imbibed some ideas from physicians they had seen in other states.

Dr. Burrill, who was here in 1838, was one of the first physicians in the county.

Dr. King located in Macon county in 1839, and began practicing both there and in what is now Piatt county. He received his medical education in Cincinnati, Ohio. There were but two or three physicians in Macon county upon his coming west. Dr. King has honored his profession, and is now enjoying a ripe old age in Decatur.

Dr. Hillis came to the county a short time after Dr. King, and remained for a short time.

Following these were the revered Dr. Hull, who came to this little county in 1841. He seemed to possess just the right qualities for a physician. "The memory of him, as a genial friend, companion and citizen, yet lingers in the hearts of hundreds of people; and as a high-toned, skillful physician he has left an impress upon the minds of his professional brethren, who were associated with him, that will not fade away during their lives. He was an ardent lover of nature and outdoor manly sports, which contributed no little to his generosity of heart. His ear was ever open to the tale of distress and his hand ready to give. In fine, he was one of those strong natures, mentally and physically, full of individuality, the type of which is fast falling away."

Dr. C. R. Ward located in Monticello in 1845. He soon worked himself into a very lucrative practice, the extent of which has not been surpassed by any physician in the county. His death, which occurred April 22, 1881, was lamented by all who knew him.

Dr. Coffin, now living in Monticello, came to the county in 1847; Dr. Noecker in 1853; Dr. Knott in 1855, and Dr. Coleman in 1860. (See their personal sketches.)

We notice in "The Monticello Times," of November 6, 1856, that T. Wheeler, A.M., M.D., was located in Monticello at that time.

Dr. Mitchell, now living in Bement, moved on to Lake Fork in 1853, and was the first physician at Mackville. Dr. Prosser was located at Cerro Gordo previous to 1860, and was probably the first physician of the place. Dr. Taylor was in Bement previous to 1860. Dr. J. H. Leal also located in Bement a few years previous to the war. He was in partnership with Dr. Taylor, and built up a fine practice. (See his sketch.)

The pioneer physicians of the county had trials that those of a later date know nothing of. It was a frequent occurrence for them to be called to see a patient twenty or thirty miles distant. And oftentimes it was not the distance that was to be dreaded. The ride would often have to be made on a dark night, along muddy roads, and through swamps and ponds. Sometimes the horse would have to swim streams, while the rider on his knees on the saddle, held his medicine case or the bridle-reins in his teeth.

We heard a good joke told not long since relative to a physician of a neighboring county. He was called to see a patient who lived on the Sangamon, and accordingly, after bidding his wife good-bye, he started in the dark night to ride across the prairie. After riding a long time he came to a house. He alighted, knocked at the door, to hear the question "Who's there?" He answered by asking the way to the house of the patient he started to see. What was his astonishment to hear, instead of the requested directions, a lady's voice questioning: "Why, William, is that you?" and the worthy physician found that he had alighted at his own door, and was talking to his own wife.

Pioneer lawyers.—As has been stated, there was little work for lawyers during the first few years of settlement in Piatt county. The lawyers who were here came from Decatur. Among the first who located in this place were Mr. Milligan, H. C. McComas, and A. T. Pipher. Charles Watts was also one of the first lawyers here. W. E. Lodge came to the county in 1859. A. T. Pipher and W. E. Lodge have been in the county longer than any others now located here. The personal sketches of the majority of the lawyers in the county appears further on in the book.

Poor Farm.—The Piatt County Poor Farm contains two hundred and ninety-three acres, and is situated about three miles west of Monticello. A portion of the farm is in Monticello township, while the rest lies in Willow Branch township. The farm contains sixty acres of timber land. There are six acres in the garden and three in the orchard. The almshouse proper is of brick, and its two stories and basement contain eighteen rooms, six on each floor. The insane department is apart from the main building, and consists of a building 14×24 feet, which contains two rooms. These rooms are ceiled inside with undressed lumber. There is no corridor. The windows are 1½×4 feet, and are protected by iron bars. On the outside of this building is a yard 40×50 feet, which is inclosed as an airing court.

Mr. Seits, the present keeper of the Poor Farm, took possession March 1, 1877. At that time there were but seven inhabitants of the house; since 1877, however, there has been as high as fifteen at a time. All inmates are expected to work about the house or farm, if able. When Mr. Seits moved to the place it was in rather a poor condition; since his coming the amount of fencing on the place has been doubled, two hundred rods of tile ditching has been done, two hundred trees have been planted, and many other improvements have been made. The farm at present is self-sustaining. The keeper's salary is $600, besides his family's living. The county's relief outside the Poor Farm is about $800 per year.

Piatt county jail.—This is in the rear of the sheriff's residence, on the jail lot, one block north of the court-house. The walls are of brick, lined with scantling and two-inch plank driven full of spikes. There are six iron cells in double block, with back to back. There is a corridor on three sides, while the jailor's corridor is on the fourth side. There are six long, narrow windows, with cross-bar grating. It is heated by two stoves, and ventilated by the doors and windows. There is a guard-room next to the prison, next to which is a cell for female prisoners. The building was erected in 1867.

Court-houses.—The first one was put up by Judge Rickets, in 1843, right where the present court-house stands. It was of frame, and was afterward moved to the west side of the square, and was ultimately destroyed by fire. The present brick court-house was erected about 1856, by Judge Ricketts, George Dempsey and John Lowry. It originally had a cupola on it, but a storm, some seven or eight years ago, demolished it and, in addition, tore off a portion of the gable end and roof of the building. The lower floor of the building is occupied by the county officers principally. The court-room proper and two small rooms are on the second floor.

Agricultural society.—This society was first organized in 1856, and it now has between four and five hundred members. Nearly eight hundred shares have been issued at $5 per share. The fair ground contains twenty-five acres, and its improvements and real estate are valued at about $10,000. The society is out of debt, and has about $1,500 in the treasury. For the last few years the fairs have been decidedly successful, the first two or three days' receipts being sufficient to cover all expenses. The present officers are Jesse Warner, president; E. P. Thompson, vice-president; C. A. Tatman, secretary; and Theo. Gross, corresponding secretary. The board of directors are W. H. Plunk, John Kirby, Oscar Mansfield, Horace Calef, Jesse Yoakum, William Voorhies, A. D. Newton and John Goodson.

Roads.—The primitive roads of the county were the buffalo trails. Following these came the Indian paths, and upon the white man's arrival, and for years after, the traveling was done in these tracks of the red-man. However, the time came when the continual incoming of settlers formed a few roads. Probably the first visible road of the county was that which led from Sadorus Grove to James Piatt's cabin, and on to the trading-house near the mouth of Friends creek. Not long since we saw traces of this old road in John Piatt's present door-yard. After a number of families were located here, it was sometimes the custom to break roads between the settlements by hitching oxen to a log and dragging it throughout the distance, and oftentimes a furrow was made to show where the road was.

During high waters the Sangamon was crossed by means of ferry-boats. Nathan Henline and his brother kept a ferry near where the wagon-bridge, one mile west of Monticello, is located.

The first state road intersecting the county was that leading from Danville, via Big Grove (Urbana), through what is now Monticello, and on to Springfield. The road extending diagonally across Blue Ridge township, and which is known as the State road, according to one of the early settlers in that vicinity, was never surveyed as such. The road was gained by people settling on it. It was used as early as 1832, and used to go by Cheney's Grove. Probably Mr. Richard Webb was the first to settle on it in this county.

It was five years after the first settlement was made on Lake Fork ere officers of any kind found the people. William Monroe got up a petition that led to the location of the first local road, which extended from Monticello to the head of Lake Fork, and on down the east side of the same stream. John Tenbrooke surveyed the road, and William Monroe made the furrow with Hiram Heath's ox team. After a time William Monroe got up another petition, and this time 'twas for a state road extending from Charleston to Bloomington, and in this county, following in almost the direct route of the former road. Daniel Stickle and Judge Hughes were appointed commissioners, and George Heath surveyor. A mail route was established, and the mail carrier rode on horseback.

For quite awhile the mail of the county was all carried on horseback, and oftentimes unlocked saddle-bags contained the precious load. Letters formed the principal bulk of mail matter, and the postage on each one was from ten cents to twenty-five cents, and they were sometimes weeks in reaching their destination. According to the postage law then, the postage could be paid at either end of the route, and more often the receiver paid the expense than did the sender of a letter.

When the stage routes were established, about 1839, the mail was carried by stage. There are not many living in the county who remember the first stages that passed through the county on the state road from Urbana to Decatur. The arrival of the stage coach was a great event in the week, and as the first stage driver sprang from his elevated seat to the tavern door, for the time being he was the most important man of the county. How curiously the collected villagers eyed each traveler; and the boys of the place weekly or bi-weekly surveyed the horses, harness and all the rigging of what seemed to them the most wonderful vehicle that was ever constructed.

The last stage-coach route of the county was between Monticello and Bement, after the building of the T. W. & W. railroad. "Uncle Billy" Motherspaw was the able and successful manager of this route, and did we have nothing else to remember this man by, the many deeds of kindness done by him while making his regular trips between the said places, would be sufficient to cause the people to hold him in remembrance a long time. Mr. Motherspaw is at present located in Carthage, Missouri.

Railroads.—It was not long after the building of railroads through the county ere all stage-coaching was done away with.

What is now the main division of the Wabash railroad was constructed through this county across Bement and Cerro Gordo townships in the years of 1855-56. Both ends of the road were being worked at once during the time stated, and the connection was made, according to an old settler in that vicinity, between the present towns of Milmine and Cerro Gordo.

The following statistics relative to the railroads in the county were furnished us by Mr. L. J. Bond:

The road now connecting Champaign and Decatur was chartered in 1861 as the Monticello railroad, but nothing further was done toward the road until after the war. The charter was amended and the company was fully organized in 1865, but the work did not commence until 1867. The road was put in operation from Champaign to Monticello in December, 1870, but it was not completed to Decatur until about two years afterward. It continued under the same name until the road was completed, after which it was consolidated with the Havana, Mason City, Lincoln and Eastern road. The consolidated company was transferred to that of the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western, and it remained a part of that road until the foreclosure sale by which it was re-organized as the Champaign, Havana and Western company. It is now a part of the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific road.

The Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western railroad was chartered as the Danville, Urbana, Bloomington and Pekin railroad, and was built and put into operation through this county about or a little before 1870. The road was consolidated with the Indianapolis and Danville road, and then became known as the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western railroad.

The Chicago division of the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific railroad was chartered in 1867 as the Bloomington and Ohio River railroad. It was afterward consolidated with the Streator and Fairbury company, and named Chicago and Paducah Railroad Company. It was completed and put in operation through this county about 1873. It became a part of the Wabash system in 1880.

The Havana division of the Wabash, St. Louis and Pacific railroad was chartered in 1867 as the Havana, Mason City, Lincoln and Eastern railroad, and was built through this county about 1872. The same year it was consolidated with the Monticello railroad, and with it was transferred to the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western road. After the foreclosure sale it became a part of the Champaign, Havana and Western road, but was again consolidated, and now is a part of the Wabash system.

The Indianapolis, Decatur and Springfield railroad was originally known as the Indiana and Illinois Central road, and was commenced about 1847. The company was kept alive, but nothing further was done at the road until about 1872 or 1873, when the work was pushed along to the completion of the road from Decatur to Montezuma. Within the last few years the road was finished to Indianapolis, Decatur and Springfield. In 1882 the road was consolidated with and is a part of the Indianapolis, Bloomington and Western company.

The following shows the amount of railroad business done at some of the stations in the county :

CHAPTER VII.

THE SCHOOLS OF THE COUNTY.*

IN regard to its educational prosperity, Piatt county has made advancement equal to any county in the state, considering its age. During its first decade its school-houses were few and far between. They were built by donations of material and labor, and the teachers depended upon the subscriptions of the patrons for a subsistence.

The school-houses were built of logs and the pupils sat upon slab seats. The writing desks consisted of boards laid upon wooden pins driven into the logs, and the pupils when writing faced the wall. The windows in the earlier days consisted of greased paper, as a substitute for glass, and the room was warmed by a fire-place.

The last of these primitive school-houses passed away in 1871, when the old house on "Stringtown Lane" gave way to the present improved and commodious structure. To-day the county is dotted with its school-houses, most of which are comfortably and conveniently arranged, with patent improved furniture; with folding seats and often with folding desks; with slated blackboards on which are used beautiful crayons in place of the lumps of chalk; with school-books finely illustrated, sometimes with maps, charts and pictures adorning the walls; with sufficient means for rapidly heating the often high ceiled capacious apartments; and with teachers who are generally trained by experience and special preparation for the work of educating the young. This change has occurred within the space of forty years, and yet there is much to be done before we reach the ideal in education.

The estimated value of public school property, grounds, buildings, furniture, apparatus, etc., in Piatt county as given June 30, 1882, is $78,927.

Monticello, Bement and Cerro Gordo have well-graded schools, accompanied by high-school departments. The graduates of the high-schools of Monticello and Bement are admitted to the Illinois Industrial University at Champaign without examination. Mansfield, Milmine and Hammond have graded schools, and Mackville employs an assistant, but has not two distinct departments.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTES.

During the winters of 1867-8 and 1868-9 teachers' institutes on the old-fashioned plan were held in Monticello, under the management of J. W. Coleman, county superintendent. During the winter of 1869-70 an enthusiastic meeting was held at Bement, managed by County Superintendent C. A. Tatman. At these meetings Dr. J. M. Gregory, regent of the Illinois Industrial University, and President Richard Edwards and E. C. Hewett, of the State Normal School at Normal, were the leading instructors. Prominent among those who attended one or more of these three institutes, some of whom conducted exercises, were H. A. Coffeen, T. J. Mitchell, H. E. Huston, Mary I. Reed, T. C. Fuller, J. A. Hawks, C. D. Moore, the Poland brothers, Amos Norris, Aunt Lettie and Aunt Rachel Huston, the Sover sisters, Anna Combes, Pamela (Combes) Hughes, A. D. Beckhart, R. I. Tatman, A. T. Pipher, J. A. McComas, J. A. Williams, John Garver, Nellie (Piatt) Moffitt, Fannie McFaddin, Olive (Bryden) Piatt, and Charles and Rudolph Welch.

During the seasons of the two institutes from 1867-9, C. A. Tatman was assistant principal of the Monticello schools, and on both occasions exhibited class-work before the institute. At the first he brought forward a class of pupils aged from twelve to fourteen years and showed how well they could solve problems by cancellation. Before beginning he invited members of the institute to volunteer to work with the class. H. A. Coffeen, principal of the Bement schools, and Dr. T. J. Mitchell, of Mackville, stepped forth and expressed a willingness to show how well they could cancel factors. The conductor read the problems from the book and the crayon in the hands of the children kept close pace with his voice. As soon as the inflection of the voice at the close of the reading indicated that the entire problem had been given, almost with the rapidity of thought the children detected the common factors and triumphantly wrote the result, while the older heads were waiting to see if there was something more to be given, and on the first problem Dr. Mitchell had not begun the cancellation when the children gave the proper answer. Shouts of laughter accompanied the discomfiture of the two old teachers, and although they did better with the problems following, they showed that they were no match for the children on problems in cancellation. It transpired afterward that the pupils had been specially drilled in those same problems for the occasion, but the delight of the children and the amusement of the spectators are remembered by many to this day.

The instructors (those conducting exercises) at the institute of 1868-9 were H. E. Huston, C. A. Tatman, J. W. Lewis, J. A. McComas, John Garver, John A. Williams, W. B. Sweitzer, Miss Kate Suver, Miss Anna Combes, and Frank Tippet. Public lectures were given by J. M. Gregory, E. C. Hewett, and George L. Spear. The institute began Wednesday, January 6, and continued four days, as reported by Dr. Coleman to the state superintendent. In those days it was the custom to give to the teachers while attending the institute free entertainment.

The pressure against permitting teachers to take time to attend institutes was so strong that Superintendent Tatman did not attempt to hold another, and as Superintendent Pitkin held none, the next one held in the county was under the supervision of Superintendent Mary I. Reed in 1878. This one was conducted according to the modern plan. Instructors were employed, a tuition fee was charged, and the teachers attending were arranged into classes and subjected to daily drill in the various branches for a term of two weeks. About one hundred teachers attended this institute. The leading instructor was Jasper N. Wilkinson, a former teacher in the county, assisted by the county superintendent, Miss Olive Coffeen, of La Place, Edwin B. Smith, of Cerro Gerdo, and G. A. Burgess. The next year one hundred and thirty-nine attended the institute, a number of whom were not expecting to teach. The corps of instructors remained the same, excepting that Prof. H. C. De Motte, of Illinois Wesleyan University, was employed in place of Edwin B. Smith, who had gone to Chicago to study law. The following year about eighty-five teachers attended. John W. Cook and M. L. Seymour, of Normal, were the chief instructors, and the receipts, together with the balance on hand, fell short of the expenditures twenty-five dollars, which loss was wholly sustained by the county superintendent. In 1881 no institute was held, owing to the resignation of Mary I. Reed as county superintendent early in July. In 1882 one hundred and five attended the institute. J. N. Wilkinson served as leading instructor for one week, and owing to sickness was succeeded by Robert L. Barton, of Cerro Gordo, principal of schools at Galena, Illinois. The other instructors were Olive E. Coffeen, of La Place, principal of Shipman, Macoupin county, schools, B. F. Stocks, principal of Cerro Gordo schools, and W. H. Skinner, now principal of Monticello schools. The session was three weeks in length, and was held in the north school-building, Monticello. The tuition has invariably been one dollar per week, and the balance on hand from the last institute is sixteen dollars, which will form part of the institute fund for 1883.

Since August, 1878, there has been in active operation a monthly teachers' association, which has met in various parts of the county, but is now confined to Bement and Monticello, at which places it holds alternate meetings on the second Saturday of each month. The interest in these meetings has been well maintained, about forty per cent of the teachers actually at work in the county attending.

G. A. Burgess was presiding officer of the association the first, second and fourth years, Miss Reed the third year, and F. V. Dilatush the present year. The other officers for the year are John J. Wilkinson, of Milmine schools, vice-president; Miss Cora Pitts, of Cerro Gordo schools, secretary, and Miss Alice Godwin, of Moma school, treasurer.

The association has this year formed a circulating library for use of its members, which opened with twenty volumes, and which will soon increase to forty volumes. Nineteen out of every twenty of our teachers take one or more educational papers or journals. A higher standard is constantly being demanded of our teachers. The certificates of other county superintendents are no longer indorsed, and the time will soon come when no certificates will be renewed, thus requiring teachers constantly to study to endeavor to improve. Experience has shown that where little or no effort is required to get a certificate the teacher rests content; he feels that he knows almost enough; all progress is at an end; the teacher stagnates; the school shows the effect of it, and the money expended in that district is worse than thrown away, for the teacher has done incalculable injury by permitting the minds of his pupils to grow uncultivated and untrained. Often such a teacher instills wrong ideas and wrong principles, which can never be eradicated. In this county the grades on a scale of 100, attained by the holder of a teacher's certificate, are placed upon it, so that school boards may know the judgment of the superintendent upon the work.

Our schools lack system in the daily routine of work. Each teacher follows his own idea or the idea of the text-books used, as to the order and method of pursuing, often without any regard to what has been done by the teacher preceding him. System and supervision are the two things that cause the town schools to be superior to the rural schools, and much more may be done in the rural schools in the way of systematizing the work. To this end a course of study was adopted at the last institute, and a detailed outline of study to accompany it has been issued to the schools and school officers. Blank certificates of attendance and reports to parents have been sent to teachers, with a view to introducing them into use in the schools.

It is contemplated holding monthly and annual examinations, under the management and supervision of both teacher and superintendent, for the purpose of unifying and stimulating the efforts of the schools, believing that when the people understand the plan and its objects they will coöperate in the work of introducing it into every school district.

Wall maps, reading charts and an unabridged dictionary should constitute part of the helps of every school-room, and, when possible, a globe and a box of geometrical forms or solids should be supplied. Good blackboards with good crayons and erasers are now admitted by all to be a necessity, and no school-room is ready for use till these are in place.

Our teachers need to think, to study, to get out of straightforward methods of asking questions strictly in the order of the books and requiring the verbatim text-book answers thereto. They too often make themselves slaves to the text-book, instead of making the text-book their servant. Boards of directors make too little difference between teachers. A few dollars on the month causes the removal of a tried and competent teacher to a more lucrative field, and the employment in his stead of an inexperienced stranger. The worth of a good teacher cannot be estimated. The district would be benefited often by giving the poor teacher his wages and never allowing him to begin his school. Our schools are expensive, and it behooves everyone to do everything he can to make them do the greatest possible good, that the community may get the best possible return for their investment.

Common school funds.—The funds authorized by law for the maintenance of the public schools arise from the following sources:

1. The state school fund, which now consists (a) of the tax annually levied by the state for educational purposes, and which in 1881 was twelve cents on each $100; (b) of the interest on the surplus revenue distributed by the general government to the states during Jackson's administration, and set apart by Illinois as a school fund, and (c) of the interest on the proceeds of three per cent of the sale of public lands within the state, less one-half of one per cent.

The state holds the school funds named in the last two cases and pays to the schools of the state six per cent interest thereon. The distribution is made on the basis of population under twenty-one as taken from the government census report by the state auditor, who draws his warrant for the amount due the county upon the county treasurer against the state tax in the treasurer's hands and in favor of the county superintendent.

2. The county school fund, consisting of the proceeds of the sale of the swamp lands lying within the county. This fund is loaned by the county superintendent, and the interest thereon, together with the fines and forfeitures paid during the year to the county superintendent, is annually distributed to the several township treasurers of the county on the basis of population under twenty-one years of age. At the same time and upon the same basis is the distribution of the state school fund made by the county superintendent.

3. The township school fund, consisting of the proceeds of the sale of the sixteenth section in each congressional township, donated by the general government for the support of schools. In many of the townships the section of land was sold when the value of it was so low that the fund therefrom is quite small. Town sixteen, range five, sold its section for $13,660, and has much the largest township fund in the county.

4. By special district taxes, which are levied by the directors each year in nearly all the districts to make up the amount needed to support the schools.

The township fund is loaned by the township treasurer, and the interest on it, together with the amount received from the county superintendent, is distributed by the township trustees to the school districts.

The special tax levied is paid when collected to the township treasurer for the benefit of the district levying the tax.

The distribution of the state school fund to Piatt county is now $5,591.16.

The county school fund of Piatt county is reported this year as about $8,000, but part of it furnishes no revenue, as it is undergoing litigation.

Monticello Township.—The first school in this township was taught in a log house which stood on the river bank just above the river bridge near Monticello. James Outten and George A. Patterson were teachers in this school. Another school was opened somewhat later about one mile farther up the river, near John Woolington's late residence. The first school in Monticello was taught by George A. Patterson in the first court-house. The first school-house of the place was built by Esq. A. J. Wiley and others on a lot donated by the esquire. This house stood on the site of the present residence of George Lewis. Thomas Milligan, afterward county school commissioner, was one of the early teachers of this school, as were also Major David Longnecker and Andrew McKinney.

MONTICELLO HIGH SCHOOL.

The brick school-house was built in 1857-8, and consisted of two rooms below and one above, besides the cloak-rooms. Isaiah Stickle was the first to teach in the new school-house. In 1869 or 1870 the upper room was divided, giving four rooms, as in the present arrangement. The school bell was formerly set on a platform elevated on high posts. It remained there but a few years, when the belfry now in use was erected and the bell placed in it. The bell was formerly used on the old Methodist Episcopal church.

In 1877 the north school-building was erected, but during the first year only three of its four rooms were in use. The building was not fenced until 1880. The hedge fence around the brick school-house was set out and has ever since been cared for by William Worsley, who has been janitor of the building almost continuously since a janitor has been employed. In the early days each teacher built his own fires and swept his own room.

The following persons have served as principals of the Monticello school, but perhaps not in the order named: Isaiah Stickle, Mr. Babcock, Mr. Scovell, W. F. Gilmore, A. T. Pipher, J. A. McComas, Mr. Porter, Mr. McIntosh, Arthur Edwards, P. T. Nichols, Jesse Hubbard, Amelia E. Sanford, G. A. Burgess, H. F. Baker, and W. H. Skinner. P. T. Nichols began in 1872, and taught for five years, with one year of rest intervening. Mr. McIntosh died during the school year and was succeeded by Arthur Edwards. Mrs. McIntosh has for five years been a teacher in the Bement schools.

Mrs. Amelia E. Sanford succeeded Mary I. Reed as first assistant in the high school in December, 1877, upon her resignation to accept the county superintendency, and was elected principal for the next year. Miss Reed had been first assistant for several years.

The high school was formed in 1877, with Mr. Nichols and Miss Reed teachers. The first class, composed of five girls, graduated in 1878. The class of 1879 consisted of four girls and two boys; the class of 1880, of six girls and one boy; the class of 1881, of eleven girls and one boy, and the class of 1882, of seven girls and two boys. The high school has gradually grown in efficiency till it ranks equal to that of many of the larger towns.

In the winter of 1879-80 the members of the high school were formed into two literary societies, now known as the Nervian and Monticellian societies. Each elects its own officers and conducts its own exercises. The high school began a reference library in 1879, which has increased to more than fifty volumes. The grammar school began a library in 1882, devoting the proceeds of an entertainment to it.

The teachers at present are W. H. Skinner, principal; M. Ella Child, Eva Winchester, F. V. Dilatush, Anza Minear, Lulu Parks, Nellie Espy, Jane Conoway, and Anna M. Kirkpatrick. Messrs. Charles Watts, A. J. Dighton and C. P. Davis taught in Monticello township years ago. The Stringtown school-house, the last of the log school-houses of the county, was situated in the western part of this township.

Bement Township.—The first school was taught in the village of Bement by Henry C. Booth, in 1856. The term was for three months and the salary $40 per month.

Rented buildings were used until 1859, when one wing of the present building was completed. F. E. Bryant was the contractor and J. M. Camp the builder. The block of ground now used for school purposes was donated by L. B. Wing and William Rea, and forms a beautiful campus containing the buildings near the northwest corner. In 1866 the building was enlarged to its present size, although the entire room was not used for school work until several years later.

The present school-bell was bought by Mr. Bryant in St. Louis, and formerly belonged to a Mississippi steamboat.

The first board of directors consisted of Joseph Bodman, sen., Aaron Yost and H. Booth, since which time J. O. Sparks, George Dustin, George L. Spear, Thomas Postlethwaite, S. K. Bodman, N. G. Hinkle and Royal Thomas have served as directors two or more terms, and many others have served one term.

BEMENT PUBLIC SCHOOL.

The following is a list of principals of the Bement schools: H. C. Booth, S. K. Bodman, J. W. Richards, C. D. Moore, J. B. Lovell, A. S. Norris, J. A. Helman, J. Russell Johnson, J. N. Patrick, E. M. Cheney, Mrs. Shirk, Frank M. Fowler, Asa W. Mason, H. A. Coffeen, W. J. Cousins, J. A. McComas, G. C. Gantz, A. C. Butler, Thomas Sterling, Miss Belle Sterling, R. O. Hickman, T. C. Clendenen, J. N. Wade and W. E. Mann, the present principal.

A. C. Butler taught five years. The school reached a degree of enthusiasm under the management of H. A. Coffeen, in 1867-68, which is yet felt in its effects upon the town. The Bement library gained a strong hold upon the people, and was largely increased through Mr. Coffeen's efforts. A literary society formed at this time maintained an organization for ten or twelve years.

The present course of study was planned and put into operation by T. C. Clendenen. The high-school work requires four years for its completion. Last year (1881) the high school was admitted to the accredited list of high schools of the Illinois State University at Champaign, and its graduates can now enter any of the courses of study of that institution without further examination. The high-school reference library was started under the auspices of T. C. Clendenen. The school manages two literary societies—the Baconian and Edmund Burke. The class of 1881 was the first to graduate, and consisted of five girls; the class of 1882 consisted of three girls and two boys, and the class for 1883 now has eight members.

In 1878 a school-house was built in the southern part of the district to accommodate those who lived too far from Bement. Miss Joanna Fleming was the first teacher in this school, and Luther Thompson the present teacher.

The present corps of teachers in the Bement school is as follows: W. E. Mann, principal; Lucy J. Stockwell, assistant principal; Julia C. McIntosh in grammar department; Joanna Fleming and Anna Pettit in the intermediate departments, and Lucy Sprague and Sara J. Haldeman in the primary departments. Miss Haldeman has been a teacher in the Bement schools for fourteen years.

Mr. G. L. Spear, the oldest teacher in the county, has charge of the Davis school, in the northwestern part of Bement township.

Cerro Gordo Township.—The first school in which this township was interested was taught in a log school-house one-half mile west of the village of Cerro Gordo, just over the line in Macon county. Andrew McKinney was the first teacher of whom we have account. The first school-house in the village and the first in the township was built about 1857, on the site of the present school-building. Andrew McKinney taught in this house for three years.

In 1867 a two-story brick school-building was erected at a cost of $6,000. About 1873 a wing of the same size and material was added, at a cost of $3,000, and in 1881 a frame addition of one room was built, costing $600.

The first board of directors of this school consisted of A. L. Rodgers, Isaac Wilson and W. L. Pitts.

The following is the list of principals of the school, and the order in which they served: Mr. Green, John Garver, Mr. Welch, P. H.

Harris, E. Duncan, A. D. Beckhart, T. C. Fuller, Miss Olive E. Coffeen, Joshua Thorpe, A. R. Jolly and B. F. Stocks.

The school is well graded, and has lately adopted a course of study of eight years in the lower grades and three years in the high school. The first class of the high school will graduate in 1884. At the county fair in 1882 the schools secured more premiums awarded to graded schools, not including high schools, than all the other graded schools of the county taken together. The following persons form the present corps of teachers: B. F. Stocks, principal; Mary A. Kaufman, Ida F. Frydenger, Eva Huff and Cora A. Pitts.

The present two-story brick school-house in Milmine was built in 1871, at a cost of $4,500. Jasper N. Wilkinson was its first principal, and was followed by A. D. Beckhart, W. H. Chamberlain, Allen S. Stults, John A. Smith, Frank East, — McKinney, Charles Hughes, M. M. Morrison, Joel Dunn, George E. Stuart, and John J. Wilkinson, the present principal. Among the assistant teachers were Mary (Mitchell) Hawkes, Ella (Newman) Conway and Hortense Klapp. Two teachers are employed during the winter term and one only during the summer.

The La Place school is situated outside the village at some distance, and the school-house is far behind the wealth and intelligence of the community, being too small and too inconvenient for the demands made upon it. A building with two rooms on the lower floor and a hall above, which might in the future be used for a school-room, would add greatly to the village and the school district. Miss Sue Gregory and Mr. Thurber were among its early teachers, Miss Olive Coffeen and E. O. Humphrey among the later. Mr. Humphrey is the teacher at present writing. Several of the former pupils of this school are now prominent teachers of the county.

Prominent among the teachers of Cerro Gordo township in the past were the East brothers, whose home is one mile south of Milmine. Ulric taught the Gulliford and Baird schools and then went into graded school work. He died in California about two years ago, where he had gone to regain his health. Frank taught the Pleasant View, Ridge, La Place and Milmine schools, and died about one year ago. Oscar taught the Baird, Pleasant View and Gulliford schools, and is at present living in Chicago. Homer taught the Gulliford school one term, and is now managing the home farm. They are a family of natural teachers, but the confinement of the school-room did not agree with their health.

Goose Creek Township.—The first school was taught by George A. Patterson in a log school-house which stood by the gate at the entrance to W. H. Piatt's residence grounds. Formerly the Piatt and Morain schools were the principal ones of the township, the average attendance in each running from sixty to eighty scholars. Among the early teachers of the Piatt school were Mr. Winstead, Margaret Patterson, Delos Tew, now a professor in one of the colleges or academies of Iowa; Louis Bonnet, now a wealthy resident of Iowa; Miss Lizzie Shattuck, S. K. Bodman, who taught the writer of this book her letters, and who is now postmaster and druggist in Bement; George Marquiss, and Misses Louisa Craft, Louisa Gale and Mollie Bondurant. Miss Shattuck was sent here under the auspices of an organization in New England, for the purpose of advancing education in the west. She afterward went as a missionary to the West Indies.

The old log school-house of the Piatt district gave place about 1866 to one of the neatest and most commodious rural school-houses in the county. Mr. A. S. Poland was a most successful teacher in this school for several consecutive years. He now resides in Ohio. Of the later teachers, John and Emma Marquiss were pupils of Mr. Poland. The district has of late been divided and a new school-house, the Harmony, has recently been dedicated.

Among the names of the teachers of the Morain school are Samuel Morain, Kate (Piatt) Bryden, Jack Bryden, Charles Welch, Mr. Johnson, Philip Lewis, and many others. Others teachers of the township are Rachel Huston and William Smith, now deceased.

The De Land school, the only village school in the township, employs but one teacher. The De Land district maintains also another school one and a half miles from the town. E. E. Carrier teaches the village and L. S. Kidd the rural school. Benjamin F. Stults, now of the Weldon school, taught the De Land school for several terms.

Sangamon Township.—The first school in Sangamon township was taught by George A. Patterson in a log school-house, which stood south of where the White school-house now stands. James Outten, who was one of the first teachers also in Champaign county, taught this school at an early day. Soreno K. Bodman, of Bement, William H. Reese, Harry Timmons, Charles Hughes, Pamelia (Combes) Hughes, Sadie Reed, and others, have taught in the schools of Sangamon township. Centerville, Galesville and Slabtown have school-houses, while White Heat and Lodge depend upon the rural schools about one mile from home. The Sangamon river forms the boundary line between all districts touching it. In this respect it is unlike any other township in the county. John E. Andrew is township treasurer of town 19, which lies wholly in Sangamon township, and D. E. Carberry, of town 20, a part of which lies within the township. Camp Creek and Slabtown districts have lately built new school-houses.

As an incident showing some of the old ways of creating sport in connection with the early schools would be interesting, doubtless, to some of our readers, we subjoin the following, as related to us by one of the old settlers.

One teacher, having school near what was then known as Souder's Branch, declared to the gentleman he was boarding with that if the scholars locked him out at Christmas time he would treat, provided the boys would come out and attack him. The man went over to see the fun. Sure enough, the teacher was locked out, and after a time the scholars came out and attempted to get him down. There were two boys about thirteen or fourteen and four or five from ten to twelve years of age, and several little girls. The teacher was a great strong man and for a time was entirely too much for the scholars. Finally they got the better of him, and with the girls' assistance succeeded in tying him with ropes. The children had taken the precaution to bring over a wheelbarrow to take him to the stream. They tried, but could not keep him on it. Finally one of the boys said, "Ill fix him," and off he went for a horse and sled. They got him on the sled at last, and finally they reached the side of the branch. A long debate followed about throwing him into the cold water. Finally one of the boys said, "Well, I'll throw him in," so with an effort he rolled him over and in he went. The man who had gone to witness the sport enjoyed himself hugely. When the teacher was in the water, and it began to flow almost entirely over him, the man told him he had better sign the article for treating the scholars to a bushel of apples. The agreement was made, but the boys would not let him out of the branch till the other man went his security to treat if he failed to do so. The teacher was released and started to the house for change of clothes. By the time he reached the place his clothes were frozen stiff. The apples were given to the scholars forthwith. That teacher is now a preacher in Iowa and his name is John Lyons.

Willow Branch Township.—The first school in this township was taught by Judge Edward Ater, about 1840, in a log school-house on Willow Branch. There are no village schools, as Cisco is divided by a district line and is one mile distant from a school-house. Robert L. Barton, J. Hull Brown, Caleb and Riley Tatman, the Suver sisters and Thomas Lamb, jr., are among the early teachers of this township. Mr. Barton once taught the Willow Branch school, and once in the district which now includes the Oak Grove and the East Cisco schools. Concord, Shady Nook, Wildcat and Oak Grove are suggestive names of some of the districts of Willow Branch township.

Unity Township.—The first school was taught about 1842, by John Collins, in a little house with paper windows and on land now belonging to the Benjamin Quick estate.

The first school in Mackville was taught by James Lewis, in the present school-house, which was built in 1858. Peter A. Hamilton once taught here before studying law. Later teachers were the present county superintendent, 1867; George W. Poole, now of Bement, 1868; J. A. Hawks, present supervisor of Unity township, 1869–70, and was followed by John H. Easton, who taught several terms. The village had by this time increased in population so much that an assistant teacher was employed. Mrs. J. A. Hawks was one of the first assistant teachers. Joseph Trenchard, now of Windsor, John A. Hardenbrook and wife, now of New Mexico, C. H. Righter and Miss Anna Davies have been teachers here. The latter is now again in charge after a lapse of several years. Other teachers in the township were Frank Landers, of Moultrie county, in the Harshbarger school, and Joel Dunn and Samuel McDowell, Shonkwiler school. John H. Easton taught for several years in various schools of the township, and is now in charge of the Baker school. The first school in the Mackville district was in a log house on land now owned by the widow of Adam Shonkwiler.

Atwood is in the Mackville district, and has no school-house of its own.

Hammond has just completed a new school-building of two departments. George S. Morris, of Lovington, is principal and Miss Emily Godwin, of Bement, assistant.

Blue Ridge Township.—So far as we could learn the first school-house in this township was the "Stringtown" school-house, near where Gardner switch now stands. Isaac Thomas helped to plaster the house and says it was built in 1854. It has been moved from its former location. Others say that the Cope school-house was the first and was built in 1854. This house is reported as having been moved into Mansfield.

The Mansfield schools consist of two departments. George N. Snapp, of Sullivan, is principal, and Miss Clara Kline, of Le Roy, assistant. The school-building is large, not all the room being in use. Former teachers of this school are Frank Pittman, of Monticello; W. A. Wetzell, of Ford county; George R. Shawham, now county superintendent of Champaign county, and Allen S. Stults, now principal of schools at Farmer City.

John T. Carle, now principal of Wapella schools, taught one year in the Klinger district. Edwin L. Drake, now treasurer of town No. 21, range 6, taught the West Point school for several years, and Reed Matheny taught the Blue Ridge school for two or three years. One obstacle to education in Blue Ridge township is the large size of many of its school districts, which tends to cause irregular attendance.

In the preparation of this article on the schools of the county we have taken up all the facts we could obtain. If more items occur relative to any school or township than to others it is because the people, or some one of them, have contributed more items to us. We are proud of all the schools of the county and wish them continued prosperity.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE TEMPERANCE MOVEMENT IN THE COUNTY.

BY MRS. E. P. MOFFITT.

IN the pioneer days of Piatt county the use of alcoholic liquors, both as a medicine and as a beverage, was very common. They were kept in every family and brought out on all extra occasions, at harvest time, log-rollings, barn-raisings, etc.

While some drank to excess, nearly every one drank moderately. In those days drinking was not considered an evil only so far as it was taken in excess. This sentiment prevailed not because the people were naturally bad or immoral, but because it was not generally known that alcohol was a poison, and because its effects on the human tissues were not understood or even dreamed of. It was thought as long as a man drank moderately that he was safe; not understanding that it irritated and inflamed the mucous membrane of the stomach; that it gradually became thickened and corrugated; that the gastric juice was vitiated, hindering digestion; that the blood, the supporter of life, was made morbid and impoverished, and that, therefore, the moderate drinker was less able to withstand disease, and was in constant danger of becoming the victim of an increased and depraved appetite. Neither was it understood that the appetite for the drink, with all its attendant physical and mental conditions, strengthened and intensified, were transmitted to the offspring; that the offspring of moderate drinkers might be the drunkards of the next generation.

However, as the county progressed in other lines of civilization, so it began to improve in public sentiment on drinking habits. As the county began to be settled from older counties, as educational and church facilities increased, so in proportion did the people begin to think of the evils of drink. It began to be noticed that the boy not only followed the example of his father in drinking moderately, but that he did not stop at that point. This set parents to thinking, and for the sake of the boy alcoholic liquors began to be excluded from use in individual families; thus a sentiment against drink slowly but surely arose.

About the year 1855 a Good Templars' lodge was organized in the town of Monticello, which for a time did some active work by drawing within its fold many who had been long addicted to drink, many of whom have ever since been total abstainers. This organization was also instrumental in organizing other lodges throughout the county, thus laying the foundation for a healthy sentiment necessary to root out the traffic. This was accomplished for the first time about five years ago, the last saloon being closed out at Mansfield through the aggressive efforts of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of that place.

The county has at different times had a number of temperance organizations, among which were the I. O. G. T., a County Alliance, some two or three juvenile temperance organizations or "Bands of Hope," a county organization of the W. C. T. U., and four local societies of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Scientific temperance text books, treating of the effects of alcohol on the human tissues have been used in some of the public schools of the county. It is hoped that the good people of Piatt county will look into this matter and see that their boys and girls are taught the evils which drink brings to them mentally, physically and morally. Let the youth of the county be so fortified against strong drink by an intelligent understanding of the evil effects of alcohol that we need have no fears for the manhood of the rising generation. Five years of practical prohibition in the county have done much, as nearly all agree, to advance the real interests of the people. This is true in nearly every respect, as has been ascertained by actual investigation, and by comparison with the official records in other counties where saloons abound. The towns of Piatt county are out of debt and have money in the treasury. The expenses for crime and pauperism are comparatively light.

Only occasional murders have occurred, and very seldom a convict has been sent to the State prison. The towns have good sidewalks, good churches, and the state of intelligence and morality is good. Piatt county would no doubt have a still better record were it not for the fact that it is joined to counties on either side where saloons abound in great numbers.

This state of affairs has been brought about by prohibition under local option, and it is claimed by some that this method is more effectual than prohibition by constitutional amendment. While local option is perhaps better than nothing, and may have served a good purpose, it has many objections:

First—Local option in its results is not a legal obligation, only a moral one. It is the sole prerogative of a city council or town board to say whether or not a vote for license or no license shall stand; cases being on record where towns have voted no licenses, and the board has, notwithstanding, granted license, and vice versa.

Second—The work against the saloons has, as a rule, to be done over every year, causing men and women to spend much time and money, besides the towns being in danger every year of coming under license rule.

Third—Under local option, where the question of license or no license is voted on by towns, the farming portion of a community can have no voice in deciding the matter. And yet he may, against his will, through his family, be forced to submit to the evil effects of the saloons of the town, while prohibition by constitutional amendment gives all an equal chance.

This question of prohibition by constitutional amendment will, sooner or later, come before the people of Illinois for final settlement, and it is earnestly hoped that the citizens of Piatt county will be as progressive in this as in other matters. Let the voters investigate this subject for themselves. It is not well to depend on newspapers for reports on prohibition. Remember many of them are paid by the line.

for publishing reports unfavorable to prohibition. Let convictions be formed from the examination of official records in states where prohibition has been tried (see J. N. Stearn's "Is Prohibition a Success?" and the "Prohibitionists' Text Book," National Temperance Publishing House, 58 Reade street, New York), and whatever is done let Piatt county not fall behind in the good work of elevating humanity. Let the citizens be foremost in throwing aside all selfish motives and narrow prejudices and do their part to rid the country of the greatest curse of history.

We quote the following article, prepared by Mrs. Blair, President of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the nineteenth congressional district.

Nearly every item has been taken from official records, and where no qualifying statement is made they may be depended upon as accurate. CHAPTER IX.

PATRIOTISM OF PIATT COUNTY.

* * * * *
" 'Mid storm of shot and shell,
Contending nobly for the right,
Her heroes fought and fell!

For in the battle's fiercest shock,
Where charging squadrons met,
Where gory sabers rose and fell,
Where gleamed the bayonet,
Where the dying and the dead
Most thickly strewed the ground,
Amid the thickest of the fight,
Her sons were ever found!

All honor to her noble slain,
To her heroic dead;
Soft be the turf, and bright be the flowers,
Above their lowly bed!
The story of their gallant deeds,
Engraved on history's page,
To future ages shall descend,
A priceless heritage!"

THIS has ever been a patriotic county. Almost ever since its organization, Fourth of July celebrations have been held at the county-seat. Judge Emerson delivered the first Fourth of July oration in the county in 1837, and his toast on that occasion, "May this Monticello bring forth another Jefferson," is yet remembered by many of the older citizens. Of late years not only has Monticello held celebrations on the day mentioned, but Bement and almost all the towns of the county have shown their individual patriotism.

The citizens of this small portion of the state's territory are justly proud of the part Piatt county played in the rebellion. It has been published more than once that this was the banner county of the state for sending soldiers to the war in proportion to its population. Piatt county even outranked Illinois in this particular. Reckoning on the census of 1860 as a basis, Illinois sent out 100 soldiers for every 742 inhabitants, while Piatt county sent out 100 men for every 580 inhabitants. Out of a population of 6,124 Piatt county sent out 1,055 soldiers, which was 240 men in excess of the county's share.

In no better way can we portray the patriotic spirit of the county than in quoting some from a speech by our fellow-citizen, Mr. C. D. Moore.

Referring to the late war he remarked: "It is difficult for us to realize what our little county did. It is easy enough for us to read the simple statement that Piatt county sent out 1,055 men, but that, when compared with the vast armies that were marshalled upon the field of strife, is a very insignificant number. It can only be made a large number in a relative sense. Suppose there were 2,500 to 3,000 of the able-bodied men of the county drawn up and ready to march from the county to-day. Think, if you can, what a depletion that would make in the present population of the county. Why that number of men would have made, in the days of the revolution, a very respectable army, a rather formidable force; and yet the number would be no greater in proportion to population than 1,055 was at that time."

While it is true that Piatt county takes a position in the front rank, and the same is easy to say, "yet the full brightness and glory of that record cannot be seen and fully appreciated without taking into consideration a fact or two. Piatt county more than filled her quota, and that, too, without a draft. She did her duty by making an enrollment of all her able-bodied men, according to law, yet she passed through the fiery ordeal without even the 'smell of the draft being found on her garments.'"

"Not one of that brave band of 1,055 men were induced to go to the front by the offer of a bounty. No bounties were necessary. The only thing in the shape of a local inducement held out was that the county, through the authorities, guaranteed the protection of their families while they were absent at the front doing battle for the right. This guarantee was made good by the county. No, there were no drafted men or bounty-jumpers among them. They were volunteers, in the highest and noblest sense of the term. They saw that the nation's life was in jeopardy; they saw the uplifted hand of treason prepared to strike at her vitals; they beheld her in a deadly grapple with gigantic rebellion; they heard her call for help, and bravely and heroically answered that call. To them it was no holiday parade, no boy's play, but work—earnest, terribly earnest work. They placed their lives upon their country's altar, and dedicated their best energies to the preservation of the country's integrity, the vindication of the nation's honor, and the re-establishment of the glory and supremacy of our flag. All honor to the soldiers of Piatt county."

War Incidents and Anecdotes.—In this connection we cannot refrain from relating a few items that have come under our notice relative to life in the army. We give almost verbatim the majority of war incidents that have been given to us. Doubtless these few will awaken in the minds of the readers many equally interesting tales that might be told, yet the following will serve as examples of the alternating grave and humorous sides of army life.

A soldier of the Mexican war now living in this county remembers a little joke on a Dutch sentinel. While on duty the sentinel heard some one coming, and called out "Who comes there?" The answer came, "A friend." The sentinel called, "Halt! You cannot pass until you give the countersign, which is Mexico."

In the early days of the late war a number of men in this county organized themselves into a company for drilling purposes, and styled themselves "The Home Guard." Their object was to be the better prepared when their turn came to enlist in the army. One morning, when the men were drawn up ready for drill, the captain suddenly read an order or telegram for men to go to the war. The captain then spoke to the men, asking all who could answer the call at once to ride forward. Alas, where was the patriotism of the men? One lone horse struggled forward against the will of the rider, and Joseph Mallory's credit was saved. It was soon discovered that the order to the front was a false one, and the order of the Home Guards was revived. They resolved next time not to show such tardy patriotism, and they kept their word. The joke was too good, however, to be soon forgotten.

Another organization, known as the Home Guards, was made in the county, in the southeastern township. The object of the organization was the protection of the people. One of the ladies of the vicinity reported the fact that she saw some rebels making an embankment preparatory to an attack on the neighborhood. Further observations were made, and, sure enough, one of the guards reported seeing the confederates, as he supposed. The information seemed to be sufficient to call out the company. After numerous deployments in sight of the supposed rebels, the captain gave the order to "open fire." After a few minutes of rapid firing they were ordered to advance. The advance was anxiously made, and the enemy was discovered to be—dead sheep. It afterward was found out that the lady giving the first alarm had only seen a man in the distance fixing fence.

A member of the 107th Ill. reg. relates the following: "We had a Michigan regiment in our brigade as we were on the Atlanta campaign; and all the Michigan men were noted foragers. Once, two of the men from the regiment referred to stepped from the ranks as the regiment was on the march, climbed a fence, killed a sheep, got back to the company, skinned the sheep, marched along the while, and never lost the step."

One of the soldiers of the county gives the following as his experience in foraging for chickens: The cook had promised a pot-pie as soon as a good fat hen came in. The forager watched his chance and secured an old hen, while the rest of the party captured geese. Just as each of them secured a goose the provost-marshal came around and "ordered the geese back, and they filed back." The old hen, however, went into a knapsack and under a coat tail, the owner of which articles was enabled to salute the marshal with no poultry in sight. But all danger was not yet over. A fence had to be climbed by the man carrying the knapsack, during which operation his gun caught in his clothing and went off, thus attracting general attention. However, the camp was reached and—the pot-pie was made.

One of the captains now living in this county was once encamped with his company near a rich farmer's residence in the South. Soon some of the boys started to the large farm for the purpose of decoying some turkeys that were in sight. The fowls seemed excited by the unusual stir and began showing their distress as some were being caught. One old turkey flew up and over the tree-tops even. As he did so a young lady of the house, who had just stepped out, clapped her hands, exclaiming, "Goody! goody! I wish you would fly to England."

Some of the soldiers grew very brave in their foraging expeditions. Three of the "boys" once went to a house to get some salt, and after being refused several times a negro said there was some in the smoke-house, but warned them not to go in, as a blood-hound was there. One of the men, however, opened the door enough for the dog to put his head out, while another of the men "put his bayonet against the dog, which caused it to lie down," and the salt was easily obtained.

One of the men just referred to, at another time and in company with another man, came near being entrapped by three bushwhackers. The two were out scouting for dinner, and just chanced to get the "drop" on the three bushwhackers. A mutual agreement was made to let each other alone and the scouts were safe.

One man, for years a resident of this county, assisted in catching a rebel spy. Two of them went into a yard to get some water and found a man bundled up in rags, apparently crazy. One of the men said to the other, "Go punch that man with a bayonet." Before he had been punched very often the man's crazy spell was gone. His rags were taken off and a man in rebel uniform stood before them. A union captain happened to be near, and as he outranked the men who found the spy he received the credit of the capture. The spy was executed in twenty-four hours after being found.

The pickets of a certain company began firing one night at a supposed enemy which they could dimly see. Soon the reserve force came up, assisting in the firing, and the whole regiment was roused ere it was discovered that the supposed enemy was an old horse quietly picking grass, and that not a single shot had hit him.

One union man while foraging saw several rebels, and upon attempting to get away met five union men, whom he warned of danger. The five went on, however, and the next day were found hung on a tree right near where they had been warned the previous day.

A little joke perpetrated by one of the Piatt county boys was told in the following manner: "Our regiment once stopped under a tall pine tree and gave the road to Gen. Cox and his staff. Just as the general rode under the tree one of the boys called out, 'Come down Jim; we're going now; the general has passed.' Gen. Cox looked up and tried to see a man in the pine tree that was too tall for almost any man in America to climb. Upon the immediate cheering of the 'boys' the general dropped his head and spurred his horse rapidly forward."

The trials during the siege of Knoxville will not soon be forgotten by the soldiers. Fortunate was the soldier if he chanced to have an acquaintance living in Knoxville. One of the men was secretly furnished with an oyster can of meal a day for a "sick man," until his comrades watched him in order to share the prize. The result was that the allowance was stopped.

The neatest foraging we have ever heard of occurred during this siege. One night a regiment was ordered to march into the town, and upon reaching the center of the place was ordered to halt and stay there over night. In the night two of the boys left the guns and went into a frame house to get something to eat. The German woman living there said she had nothing to eat, but, while in the house, one of the boys chanced to see her pour some water through an auger-hole in the floor. He kept his own counsel, however, and the men left the house without food; but later in the night these two men dug a trench to the cellar of this house, found a hog, which, by the way, did not even squeal, killed it, and the regiment had it eaten up before morning. For quite a while no one except the two concerned knew where that hog came from.

Record of Piatt County Soldiers.—The following history of regiments and record of soldiers have been prepared by carefully leafing through eight large volumes of the adjutant-general's reports of Illinois soldiers. No pains have been spared to make the report as complete as possible, yet there may be some mistakes; for example, throughout the reports two different Monticellos were given; in some cases men reported themselves from places the names of which have since been changed, and in several instances we found the same person's name spelled in two and even three different ways. With one exception, only histories of regiments are given the original of which appears in the adjutant's reports, and histories are given only of those regiments having the greatest number of Piatt county soldiers:

In regard to the 72d Ill. Inf., we give the following from items furnished by M. A. Adams, of this county. About 94 were enrolled in Co. E, nearly one-fifth of whom, Mr. Adams reports as being from Piatt county.

“The regiment rendezvoused at Chicago (Camp Douglas) and was mustered into United States service August 18, 1862, and started to Cairo August 23. Left Columbus, Ky., for the field November 21, and marched six miles south of Oxford, Miss., with a part of Grant's army. Left Memphis, March 1, 1863, with the forces that went on the Yazoo Pass expedition. Marched from Milliken's Bend to Hardtimes landing. Crossed over to Grand Gulf and marched to Raymond, Miss. At Champion Hills the rebels were compelled to retreat after a hard fought battle. At the Big Black River the rebels were pushed so close that they set fire to the bridge too soon, and cut off several hundred prisoners to us. We had to bridge this stream when we advanced to within four miles of Vicksburg, May 19, 1863, and with

Sherman and others formed line of battle to correspond with their line of forts and breastworks twelve miles long. The face of the country was almost impassable. We had to assist each other to climb some of the hills ; besides it was difficult getting over the felled timber. On May 22 we charged the whole line, lost one-half our company, but did not take the works. We had to lay down to a siege which lasted 46 days. During this time flags of truce were sometimes put out and the Union boys and rebels met for trading purposes. On June 25 we were all called out in line of battle to take Vicksburg, when Gen. Logan blew up the Southern Confederacy, or rather a hole through the bottom of it. They dug under Fort Hill and planted a magazine, which was exploded. The 45th Ill. rushed into the fort, but as soon as the rebels saw the joke they rallied and compelled the 45th to retire with heavy loss. We never learned how much damage the rebels sustained, but we know they lost one negro. He was blown clear over to Gen. Logan's grounds—was not hurt, only emancipated and scared. His photos were on sale for a year at fifty cents. On July 3 the rebels hoisted a flag of truce in token of surrender, and on the 4th we marched into the city. On August 27 our regiment was called out to arrest the Marine Brigade, which refused to go ashore and do infantry duty. October 6 we left Vicksburg for up the river, and arrived at Paducah, Ky., November 9. Left Nashville November 14, and reached Columbia. On the 24th Hood's army attacked our pickets, and on the 28th made a flank movement. On the 29th we started toward Franklin and marched all the time, and though we could see the rebel camp fires at night we reached Franklin before the rebels did. November 30 was spent in making breastworks. The enemy, who came on to us about 4 p.m., looked splendidly coming over the hills several columns deep, in line of battle. When they reached level ground we soon destroyed their nicely drawn lines. A number of rebels were taken prisoner here. After midnight we marched to Nashville, the rebels following at a respectable distance. At this place we received reinforcements, and on December 15 started for Hood's army. We soon captured all their works and a few of the men. We went into winter quarters at Eastport, Miss., and during the winter suffered some from scarcity of rations. Reached New Orleans February 20, and camped on Gen. Jackson's camping grounds. From there we went to Mobile Bay, and secured Fort Blakely and Mobile. After marching some time in Alabama, we started home July 19, and were mustered out at Chicago August 14, 1865." *

MEMORANDA OF SEVENTY-THIRD REGIMENT.

The regiment was organized at Camp Butler August, 1862, and became a part of Gen. Buell's army. Fought nobly at Perryville. Was in every battle fought by the army of the Cumberland, from October, '62, to the route of Gen. Hood's army, at Nashville, and winding up of the whole matter. Was in the engagements at Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge and the succession of battles from Chattanooga to the fall of Atlanta. Formed a part of Opedyke's brigade at Franklin, which saved the day and lost its last man killed in driving Hood's army from Nashville. It left the state one of the largest, and returned one of the smallest, regiments, and the officers and men were noted for bravery. It is supposed that nearly two-thirds of the organization wasted away by disease, death, or battles during the three years' engagement.

CHAPTER X.

THE "SNOW-BIRDS" AND THEIR RELATIVES.*

MR. GEORGE HAYWORTH was the first man to settle within the limits of what is now Piatt county. He came to Illinois from Tennessee with a colony of Quakers. Some went to Tazwell county, and some to Vermilion county, while Mr. Hayworth came to this county in the spring of 1822. He built a small log cabin on what is now W. E. Lodge's place in Monticello. Soon after he, with the assistance of some Indians, built near the other a larger cabin, which is still standing. Mr. and Mrs. Hayworth had four children, two girls and two boys. Mr. Hayworth lived in his new home about three years when he went to Danville to school his children. In 1829 he owned a hewed log house, the largest residence in Danville.

MR. JAMES MARTIN, formerly from Kentucky, came from Ohio to Illinois in 1822. In the fall of 1822 he settled in what is now Piatt county. He built a little log cabin near where Mr. Nath. Rhoades' barn now stands. During Mr. Martin's first season at his new home his wife died, and he sold out his claim to a gentleman by the name of Daggot. Mr. Martin then went back to Indiana and persuaded his niece, Mrs. Furnace, and nephew, John Martin, to move to Illinois. They all came west, and camped from fall to spring near where Mr. Jim Blacker now lives. In the spring a cabin was built near the camping place. These people were living in their camp when Mr. Abraham Henline, sr., made his first visit to this section of the country. Mrs. Furnace had two children, Nancy and Sam. Nancy is still living. Her first husband's name was Jacob Cline. Mr. Ingram, who is now dead, became her last husband. Mrs. Furnace and Mr. John Martin both died in the old cabin where they moved in the spring after their season of camping out. Their remains lie in the Wright burying ground. Mr. James Martin went to Indiana about 1831 and died there.

MR. DAGGOTT bought Mr. Martin's claim on what is now a portion of Mr. Rhoades' land. Mr. and Mrs. Daggott had five children; two girls and three boys. After living here about two years they left their claim and went to Big Grove—Urbana—in Champaign county. It is related by the old settlers of the county that Mr. Daggott spent one winter in capturing and penning up wolves, with the hope that the legislature would pass a law paying a bounty for wolf skins. Mr. D. had several wolf traps in different parts of the county. Quite a number of years afterward the remains of some of the traps could be seen. The bones of deer and hogs were scattered in their vicinity. At one time Mr. Daggott had as many as ten or twelve wolves in a rail pen in his dooryard. Mr. Daggott had a tanyard near the bridge, not far from Mr. Nath. Rhoades' house.

MRS. HARDING INGRAM nee Nancy Furnace, who came to the county in 1822, thus having lived longer in Piatt county than any one else, was born in Kentucky in 1818. Her folks came to the county in October, 1822, and stayed at what was afterward known as the Terry place. The next fall they moved to where Jim Blacker now lives and camped there. The family included her mother, brother, uncle and herself.

In the spring of 1824 a house was put up and Mr. Henline's people came the same year. Mrs. Ingram, when a child, was a warm friend of the Indian children and used frequently to play with them. She first married Mr. Jacob Cline. He died leaving three children, only one of whom is living. Jane married John Wilson. One child, Nancy J., is still living. Jacob Cline married E. Caroline Story, has four children—Jennie, Steven, Gertrude and Almer M.—and lives with his mother. Mr. Harding Ingram became Mrs. Cline's second husband. Two of their children are now living. Of these, Susan first married Samuel Shoe, by whom she had one child, Charles. She next married William Baker. Maggie, the wife of Almer Heath, has one child, Ora May, and lives in Sangamon township. Mrs. Ingram's youngest son was killed by being thrown from a horse in 1865. In about two months afterward Mr. Ingram was killed almost instantly by being thrown from a loaded wagon on his way home from Champaign.

MR. NATHAN HENLINE.—The next season after the siege of Boonesborough, a family moved on pack-horses from North Carolina to Kentucky. Abraham Henline, a lad eighteen years old, was a member of this family, which remained in Kentucky for a time. Mr. A. Henline married Elsie Mosslander, who formerly was from New Jersey. After the birth of one child these people moved to Ohio, and while living there nine more children were born. Of this family of ten children, the next to the youngest was named Nathan, and it is he who is the subject of this sketch. Nathan was born November 22, 1815.

In 1822 Mr. Abraham Henline with his wife and four of his sons—Abraham, Jacob, James and Nathan—moved to Illinois. They stopped for a time on Fancy creek, within nine miles of Springfield. Mr. Henline did not feel quite satisfied to remain there permanently without first looking over the country somewhat. In the midst of his indecision he met with Mr. Martin, a man whom he used to know in Ohio. Mr. Martin had come west previously and had decided to locate within the present limits of Piatt county. He had gone to Springfield to have a pair of shoes made, and while in that vicinity had heard of Mr. Henline, and upon meeting him, spoke so highly of the country where he expected to live that Mr. Henline was induced to accompany him home.

Mr. Henline, taking his son Abraham along, started to look up a place for permanent location.

He was satisfied with the country in Mr. Martin's vicinity and went back home to prepare for moving.

During the short time that Mr. Henline had lived on Fancy Creek, death had come into his family, and the wife and mother had been taken away. Accordingly, then, Mr. Henline, with only his four sons started to their new home in the spring of 1824. The first house they saw on their way was at Mechanicsburg; the next was owned by Mr. Stevens, on Stevens creek. The trading-house on the Sangamon, about two miles below the mouth of Friends creek, was the next house they reached. Mr. Hayworth's, within the present limits of Monticello, was the fourth house they had seen since leaving Fancy Creek.

Mr. Henline took a claim of 160 acres and built a cabin near Coon's Spring, north of Monticello, and with his sons kept batchelor's hall a number of years. This new home was taken possession of in April of 1824, and immediately was begun the work of clearing a place for corn. After fifteen or twenty acres were cleared, and after the crop was laid by, a misfortune came to these new settlers. All but one of the five horses they brought with them died from the effects of fly and mosquito bites. Everything that could be thought of was resorted to during the season to destroy or keep off these dreaded insects. Fires were built near the horses with the hopes that the smoke would keep them away, and the horses were sometimes seen to roll in the very midst of the coals of fire. After the loss of the horses, oxen were used instead.

At this time there were plenty of wild hogs all through the woods. One day Nathan and his brother James found two wild sows with their pigs in a bed of leaves and straw. James slipped up and caught one of the sows by the hind legs, which action caused a great scattering among the pigs, but James held fast to his prize, while Nathan and the dogs secured the other hog. These hogs with their pigs, were kept penned up for awhile and then let out, when their natural instincts led them to seek their home in the forest again. The little pigs had become tame and were readily kept at home.

It will be seen by the dates mentioned that Nathan Henline was about nine years old when he came to the county. At this time he was a hale, hearty, fun-loving boy. He early learned the use of a gun and has been a hunter ever since. The Kickapoo and Pottawatomie Indians in this vicinity outnumbered the white people, so it was to them that Nathan looked for company. He soon made many lasting friends among the Indian boys, and for several years was almost constantly with his swarthy playmates. He learned to be almost as swift on foot as the Indians, and their arts of fishing and trapping were made known to him.

An Indian squaw made him a present of a buckskin hunting shirt. This was of great service to him and was in use for many years.

It would have been very romantic had this palefaced youth fallen in love with some beautiful Indian maiden — but he didn't. He did something vastly more sensible. He met, loved and married Sarah Souders, who lived in the northeast part of what is now Piatt county.

Sarah, the daughter of Peter and Mary Souders, was born in Virginia, in August, 1818. Her parents moved from Lee county, Virginia, to Edgar county, Illinois, in 1830. In 1832 they moved to what is known as the Argo settlement, in Piatt county. Mr. and Mrs. Souders lie buried near this home, where they both had selected their burying-place. Of the family of eleven children, only two are now living — Mrs. Henline and one brother in Missouri.

Mr. and Mrs. Souders somewhat reluctantly gave their consent to the marriage of their daughter to Mr. Nathan Henline. His worldly possessions were quite meager, and, too, the extreme youth of both parties was an objection.

However, all arrangements that could be made in those times were resorted to for the approaching marriage. Maple sugar was prepared and sold in Pekin for breadstuff and for Sarah's wedding dress. The dress was made of white goods that cost 75 cents per yard, and its style was very simple. A draw-string drew it together at the neck and another string answered for a belt. Mr. Souders tanned leather and made Sarah's wedding shoes.

Mr. Henline bought his wedding clothes in Pekin. His wedding shoes were the third pair he had ever had, and his wedding shirt was done up by a little boy. The 12th of November, 1833, was chosen for the wedding day, and when the eventful time arrived, Mr. Abe Henline started to Big Grove — now Urbana — for Squire Byers to perform the marriage ceremony. When he arrived at Big Grove, the squire was not there and Mr. Henline had to hunt him up. This additional ride delayed him so that the folks at Mr. Souders' had given up their coming that night. Near eleven o'clock, when preparations for retiring were about to be made, Mr. Henline arrived with the squire. Hurried preparations were made, and the couple were about to step forward to be united, when some one remembered that the license was gotten in Champaign county. As Mr. Souders resided in what was then Macon county, the marriage would be illegal if performed in his house. Again the marriage was delayed until the wedding party, bearing burning sticks of wood for torches, marched over beyond the county line into Champaign county. There, in the woods, near midnight of the 12th of November, 1833, the young couple were made one. The company returned to Mr. Souders' for the night. In the midst of the remaining night Sarah was awakened by her mother rushing into the room and saying: "Sally, get up and prepare to meet your God, the stars are all falling!" The folks all rushed to the doors and windows and beheld that great meteoric shower of 1833. There was a good deal of superstition in the world even at that late day, and it is not strange that many, upon beholding that unusual scene, felt that some great judgment was laid upon them.

After staying with Mrs. Henline's folks awhile, Mr. Henline, with the labor of making 100 rails, bought a claim and cabin near the Champaign county line.

Mr. Henline, in speaking of his early married days, says: "I tell you, we were poor—we were worse than poor." "We hadn't a plate, and were obliged to make pieces of bark serve the place of plates." "We had just one fork, which we have yet." This fork was presented to Mr. Henline by the Indians, and is known to be fifty-three years old. Mr. Henline also has a kettle, which has been in his family eighty-four years.

Shortly after their house was built, Mr. Henline borrowed a team and with but five dollars, which he had earned by splitting rails, he and his wife started for a store called Homer, on the Salt Fork of the Vermilion river, to buy things to begin housekeeping with. By the time a skillet, oven, set of blue-edged plates, and knives and forks were selected the money was all gone. The merchant, Michael Coffin, who was acquainted with Mr. Henline, urged him to take five dollars' worth more of goods, and said that he would willingly wait until fall, when Mr. Henline could send in otter skins to settle the debt. Somewhat reluctantly Mr. Henline consented to go in debt, and so they started home with just ten dollars' worth of goods to go to housekeeping with.

For a bedstead in the new house Mr. Henline made what was known as a prairie bedstead. This was made by inserting the end of a pole into the logs of the cabin, about four feet from the corner and two feet from the floor. At the end of this eight or nine-foot pole, another about four feet in length was joined, and it projected at right-angles toward the side of the house and was inserted in the logs. Upon these poles boards were laid and the bedstead was completed. Mrs. Souders had fortunately presented the newly married couple with good bedding and a good feather bed, so with the new bedstead they were quite comfortable. When company came, a pole sled was brought into the house and a bed was made upon it.

The other articles of furniture in the house were similar in construction to that of the bedstead.

Although Mr. Henline saw many discouraging times, he gradually began to see better days. During the summers he farmed, and for three winters he worked a saw-mill at Centerville.

During his married life Mr. Henline has moved several times, but always within the limits of Piatt county. After going to housekeeping his first move was to Mr. John Madden's place. He next moved to Mr. Martin's place, and then back to where he first lived. Finally he moved to the place about one and one-half miles southwest of Monticello, where he now lives.

Mr. Henline has spent two summers of his life in Chicago. He was a teamster there, and his principal business was to carry emigrants from the lake landing out into northern Illinois. When not occupied in transporting emigrants, he did various kinds of teaming. He helped to haul brick for the first brick church that was built in Chicago. At this time Mr. Henline remembers but one brick building in Chicago, and that was owned by Guerdon S. Hubbard, who is still living there. At this time there were but four houses on the west side of the Chicago river. At the time of his working there, Chicago, in his estimation, was not "half as big" as Monticello. He was at Chicago when the last payment was made to the Pottawatomie Indians, when they started for Kansas.

Mr. Henline was well acquainted with many of the Kickapoo and Pottawatomie chiefs. He knew Shabbona, the peace chief of the Pottawatomies, and Shawnessah, a war chief of the Pottawatomies. He witnessed on the Illinois river, near Dresden, the inauguration as chief of a son of old Wawpawnsah. A great number of white people were present. The ceremonies began by getting in readiness a great fire some twenty steps in length. On this fire almost every delicacy that an Indian could prepare was cooked. The Indians danced around this fire, the one in front walking backward and rattling a gourd that was partially filled with fish-teeth. He was followed by an Indian with a drum, and this one was followed by the rest of the dancers. After dancing for some time a new blanket was spread down, and the man to be inaugurated as chief was conducted to the blanket. The retiring chief made a speech, and then other Indians addressed the people. Finally the young chief, who was dressed as fantastically as their customs would permit, arose and made a grand speech. Then after some more dancing the feast was ready. About three hundred Indians were present. Mr. Henline says that he and the gentleman with him were placed to eat out of the same ladle with three Indians. Mr. Henline, in speaking of his relishing the dinner, says, "I tell you I was hungry—hungry as a houseful of school-children." Mr. Henline lived in communication with the Indians long enough to learn their language. In speaking of some Indian stories, Mr. Henline related the following. One of the party of white men who had stolen five ponies from the Indians, stopped at Mr. Henline's house, and said he had bought the ponies for ten bottles of whisky. Mr. Nathan Henline recognized the ponies as belonging to some of his Indian friends, and after the man had started for Salt Creek, he, disbelieving the story of the purchase, went and informed the Indians of the route of the thieves. One of the Indians insisted upon Mr. Henline's joining in the pursuit. He went, and one of the thieves was overtaken in Randolph Grove, in McLain county. The Indian frightened the man nearly to death by first threatening to shoot him, and then by flourishing his tomahawk. By Mr. Henline's persuasion the man's life was spared and the Indians secured all they had lost. This horse-thief, who was so frightened, afterward came back and stole some horses of Mr. James Piatt. Later, at Decatur, he received punishment in shape of forty-five to fifty lashes for stealing horses. Mr. Henline used often to scare out deer for the Indians to shoot. There was one bald-headed Indian named Que-athe-hun, whom Mr. Henline considered the best marksman he had ever seen. In speaking of this Indian he says, "One might as well lie down and die as to start to run in hopes of dodging the fire from his gun." During the Black Hawk war some of the settlers in this section of the country moved in order not to be so much on the frontier. Mr. Henline's folks remained here, and there were no molestations by Indians in this vicinity.

As has been stated, Mr. H. was a great trapper and hunter. He has caught many an otter by trapping. As is quite generally known, the otters have quite an original pastime, which consists in sliding down the banks of streams into the water. The otters evidently enjoy this very much, for they have been seen to repeat the operation many times in quick succession. Mr. H. used to place the traps at the base of these "otter slides," and the unsuspecting sporting otter, instead of making his usual dive into the water, would suddenly find himself entrapped. Mr. N. Henline tells of being frightened nearly to death once by a wild cat. He, followed by one of his hounds, started up the river to look after his otter traps. After going a distance the hound began barking, and Mr. H. went to the river bank to see the cause of his excitement. There on a log, which was lying partly in the water, was a very large wild cat. Mr. H. was not at all afraid of a wild cat, so approached and began to throw clubs at the animal. He succeeded only in arousing the animal's ire, so that when he stooped for another club, a short distance from the cat, it made a spring and lit upon his back. Mr. H. remembers of climbing the river bank "in a hurry." The hound came to the rescue and dragged the cat to the ground. It started again for the log, and while there was finally killed by Mr. H. Mr. H.'s aim was not as good as usual, owing to his unexpected excitement.

Mr. and Mrs. Henline have had seven children—James, Mary Jane, Peter, Elizabeth, Ann Emily, John and Sarah Harriett. These children have all married. Two moved to Kansas, one to Missouri and one to Oregon. Peter and Elizabeth are still in this county.

Mr. William Piatt remembers an act of generosity exhibited by Nathan Henline's father that might well be inserted here. Mr. Abraham Henline took dinner with Mr. James A. Piatt the day the latter moved into the Hayworth cabin. The children of the family while at dinner fretted for milk, and Mr. Piatt inquired if Mr. Henline had any cows to sell. The latter replied that he had not, as only one of his cows was giving milk. After the meal was over, and when Mr. Henline started to leave, Mr. Piatt invited him to come again. Mr. Henline replied, "Yes, I will be back to-morrow, and will bring you a cow." "Why," exclaimed Mr. Piatt, "I thought you had none to sell." "Neither have I," said Mr. Henline; but the boys and I can do without milk better than sick children can." He brought down the cow the next day and left her with Mr. Piatt for two years.

Mr. and Mrs. Nathan Henline still live in sight of Monticello, and with the exception of Mrs. Nancy Ingram are the earliest settlers who are yet living within the limits of Piatt county. Mr. Henline at the present day is a hale and hearty man. His gray hair betokens an age which his activity scarcely warrants. His early friends as well as his friends of later years characterize him as a man of generosity and of general goodwill toward his fellow beings.

MR. ABRAHAM HENLINE, JR., in 1834 married Miss Lucy Reynolds, a step-daughter of Mr. Souders. They went to housekeeping near Coon's spring, and lived there for a short time. They moved from this place to the upper part of the county, where they lived for fifteen or twenty years. From here they moved down near Monticello, to the place where Mr. Jim Henline now lives. Both Mr. and Mrs. Henline died at this place. They left six children, of whom four are now living: Mary Ann married Henry Gressel, and is now living in the southwestern part of the state. Sarah Ann married John Conan, and now lives near Mansfield. Elijah married Mary Spencer, and their present home is east of Monticello. Two of the sons were lost in the army, one near Shreveport and the other at Little Rock.

MR. JAMES HENLINE, the next to the eldest of the four boys who came with Mr. Abraham Henline to this county in 1824, married Jane Lockwood. They lived for a time near what is now White Heath, and then moved to Iowa.

MR. JACOB HENLINE was the only one of the four Henline brothers who lived through life in "single blessedness." He was a very strong, hard-working man. He was considered by some the strongest man in the county. It was a custom in those days for neighbors to come together from their oftentimes distant homes to assist in "cabin raisings." People were known to travel for twenty miles for this purpose. Mr. Jacob Henline, on account of his superior strength, was always especially welcome at "cabin raisings." One of the early settlers of the county remembers of having seen Jacob Henline carry a log at a cabin raising that would have been a good load for three ordinary men. It is the verdict of some of the early settlers now living, that Mr. Henline wore himself out by so repeatedly exerting his strength while helping to build cabins. In 1854 he went down into Coles county, this state, where his death occurred.

THE PIATTS AND THEIR RELATIVES.

MR. JAMES A. PIATT, for whom this county was named, was born April 21, 1789, probably in Pennsylvania. His father, Abraham Piatt, moved from New Jersey to Penn's Valley, Pennsylvania, and settled on land obtained for surveying for some company. James Piatt was but a small boy when his father died. The family soon moved to Ohio, reaching Cincinnati when there were but two log cabins in it. They soon settled near Oxford, Ohio. James A., when still quite young, went back to Pennsylvania to settle up his father's estate. Only about six months of his life was spent in school, but he succeeded in giving himself a very fair education. He was a good scribe, and while in Pennsylvania settling up his father's estate, he taught one term of school. Being thrown on his own resources quite early in life, the discipline only served to make him the better prepared for his later life as a pioneer. After returning from Pennsylvania he, on December 21, 1815, was united in marriage to Jemima Ford, who was then in Cincinnati, and who was born in Maryland, January 10, 1792. Jemima, with her sister, Delia Ford, came over the mountains and to Cincinnati during the last of the war of 1812. Jemima stayed for a time with Mr. McHenry, of Cincinnati, and while there became acquainted with Mr. Piatt, who had been a contractor in the war of 1812 for his uncle, Mr. John H. Piatt. Delia Ford had her choice, to be adopted by a lady in Philadelphia or to come west with her sister. She loved her sister too much to leave her, and so, for a number of years, made her home with her. She married Mr. Tompkins, of Cincinnati, and after his death she came, in 1866, to Piatt county, where she now makes her home with William H. Piatt, the eldest son of her beloved sister. Mr. James Piatt, after his marriage, settled at Brookville, Ind., where he merchandised for a time. He then built a mill at the mouth of Little Cedar, on the White Water. He next moved to Elizabethtown, and while living there took live hogs to the island of Cuba. While living in Lawrenceburg he kept hotel a time and then moved to Indianapolis. While in this city he was a tinner, and while carrying on this business, and when traveling in Illinois in the interest of his business, he first conceived the idea of locating in what is now Piatt county, Illinois. It did not take him long to decide upon the matter, to buy the land, and to move to the present site of Monticello in the spring of 1829. He bought the Hayworth claim for $150, and paid for it all in tinware, except about $18. Some time after moving to the place he entered more land. He had a cornfield fenced on the present site of Monticello, and William and John Piatt broke up the land for the same. For a number of years he was, probably, the principal man of the new settlement. He entered and bought about 600 acres of land, right in the immediate vicinity of Monticello. Mr. Piatt was a characteristic frontier man; a number of persons now in the county are ready to affirm that he was an extremist in hospitality and in favoring early settlements. He was a perfect terror to horsethieves, and took many a hard ride in order to bring the thief to punishment; and he rarely missed his purpose. He once followed two thieves to Indiana, caught them, and brought them to Macon county for trial. About 1837 he and his son, William H. Piatt, followed a thief to Kentucky, and by riding day and night they secured their prize. The result of all this energy was that horsethieves soon learned to steer clear of Piatt county.

The following anecdote will serve to show the amount of work the tax collectors in the county used to have. The tax collector of Macon county came up to Mr. Piatt's, and thought to enjoy a little hunt while there. After staying a day or two he told Mr. Piatt that his taxes amounted to seventy-five cents. "Very well," said Mr. Piatt, "we're even then, for your board will amount to about that much." After thus teasing the man for a time, Mr. Piatt paid his tax and let him go, but the tax collector did not hear the last of the joke for some time.

The following will show one of Mr. Piatt's characteristic ways of obtaining pay for entertaining travelers, if he ever took pay at all. One time a young Methodist minister and wife, in passing through the county, stopped at Mr. Piatt's over night. When he asked his bill in the morning, he was told that it was nothing. They started on their way, but in crossing a creek not far distant the buggy was upset, broken, and the lady was thrown into the water. Mr. Piatt had to go and spend some time in mending the broken buggy. During the day the minister remarked, "You must charge for this." He was assured by Mr. Piatt that he would be charged, and by and by it was announced that in payment the minister must preach them a sermon. The minister agreed to do so if the neighbors were notified. A messenger was sent out, and the one neighbor, Mr. Terry, came, and the sermon—the first Methodist sermon preached within the boundary of Piatt county—was preached in the first house in the county, and to not more than one dozen persons.

MRS. JAMES PIATT died March 16, 1836, of what was called quick consumption. Her seven children survived her. On December 12, 1837, Mr. Piatt married Mahala Oxley. James A. Piatt died of typhoid pneumonia October 22, 1838. In a few months after his death, his wife gave birth to a daughter. Mrs. Piatt died November 16, 1850.

The following are the names of Mr. James A. Piatt's children in the order of their birth: William H., John, James A., Richard F., Anna Belle, Noah N., Jacob, and Mary J.

MR. WILLIAM H. PIATT was born near Brookville, Indiana, October 23, 1816. He came to what is now Piatt county in the spring of 1829, and that place is still his home. Upon the death of his father in 1838, as he was the eldest one of the family, William had the care of his brothers and sisters until they were of age. He and Clarinda Marquiss were united in marriage April 10, 1838, and went to house-keeping on the site of the present county fair grounds. After living there a few months he moved over the river to what is now Goose Creek township, and in 1840 located on the farm he now lives on. His present residence was erected in 1864-5. Mr. and Mrs. Piatt have had seven children, six of whom are now living. A. J., or James, the eldest of the family, and Emma C., the youngest, are still living at home. A. M. Piatt and Mattie E. Hollis were united in marriage December 20, 1866. After living in Monticello until 1879 they moved to Chicago, where they still reside. Four children, Will H., Edward Scott, Donn and Josephine C., have blessed their union. Frank A. Piatt became the wife of W. E. Lodge. (See his sketch.) C. W. Piatt and Mary Kate Sparks were united in marriage January 12, 1875. They make their home at William H. Piatt's, and C. W. has charge of his own farm as well as his father's home place. E. J. or Mima Piatt married W. E. Smith, of Monticello. (See his sketch.)

AN ANNIVERSARY RHYME. *

WRITTEN JANUARY 12, 1881.

"Dear grandpa, tell to us a story true."

So said a bright-haired girl with eyes of blue.

"And more, I'll bring my chair and sit so still,

But for my smile so sly you'd think I'm ill."

"All right, my lass," the old man said, "we'll see

If you for once as still as a mouse will be.

Now list: Last night I dreamed a dream so bright—

A dream which not to tell seems hardly right.

"I saw a low, unpainted house; some trees

So close their leaves did touch with ev'ry breeze.

Beyond these rows of trees the house did stand—

Than this no dearer place in all the land.

"A home in ev'ry sense this was I saw,

A home where only love laid down the law.

Six children in this yard and house had played,

Three boys, three girls in cherry trees had swayed.

"Some good I saw in all these children dear,

But why my thoughts would turn to one, I fear

E'en now I cannot all, nor half make out—

My eyes saw him whate'er he was about.

"The youngest boy he was, I soon could tell;

Abused by all the rest, he knew full well;

Else why must he the wood so oft bring in,

Or why the game of ball his brothers win?

"In school quite oft the teacher's wrath he got,

Then sure his hand would feel the rod—why not?

His fatal laugh would him in truth betray,

Tho' others laughed and first led him astray.

“ Too bad it was that he should thus be 'bused.
 He older grew, and all were much amused
 When he would tell his old-time troubles all —
 Now trifles, but were then not quite so small.

“ To town he went one day, in suit bran new —
 His 'likeness' he would have ; in truth he knew Event so great he ne'er had heard, and thought
 Such work nor now, nor never, be done for nought.

“ And such a picture, sure you ne'er did see.
 Right prim he sat, as straight as straight could be ;
 With thumbs in pockets, fingers spread in sight.
 Think you he thought himself some one? You're right.

He looked the picture o'er from foot to head.
 ' I didn't know I was so pretty,' he said.
 A good opinion of himself you see he had.
 So frank withal, to us he ne'er seemed bad.

“ Much more of him to you I might relate,
 But I must haste — e'en now it grows quite late.
 About his college days you'd like to hear,
 Of happy times, of friends, of schoolmates dear.

My time's quite short, but I will let you know
 The place where he from home to work did go.
 In prairie stood the town, both small and gay.
 Quite well he thrived, and happy was each day.

“ He thrived because he worked. The joy from whence?
 Ah, here's the part that I with joy commence.
 The ' willful god ' at last did send his dart
 Which pierced this lad's, and, too, a maiden's heart.

“ That story old, tho' new, again was told.
 The maiden sweet replied ; and he, made bold,
 In haste did go the parents both to see,
 If they for e'er not two but one might be.

“ Consent from all was gained, and they for life
 Were joined ; the husband he, and she the wife.
 The time wore on apace. Much joy they had.
 If I the half might tell, I'd be right glad.

“ At last their home in town no more they made.
 A country life this time the better paid.
 His childhood home again his work did need ;
 And here we find them both content indeed.

“ Now hark! and hear what he to her did say
 When they together sat at close of day;
 And listen to the answer she did make,
 And showed the while that all was for his sake.

“ ‘ And now six years, dear Kate, have passed away;
 In all six years since then, our wedding day.
 Ah, happy, happy were we then, I vow;
 But dearer, sweeter happiness we’ve now.’

“ ‘ Yes, husband dear, six years ago to-day
 Our hands, our hearts, our lives were joined for aye;
 The clouds, they’ve gathered oft since then, ’tis true,
 But scattered, and the bluer seems the blue.’

“ And now, my girl, I’ve done; and you quite well
 Did list; nor once did break your quiet spell.
 Tell you of whom I spoke? Just think awhile;
 Ah, now you know — I see by that sweet smile.

“ But late it is, and you to bed must go;
 Come here, my child; a loving kiss — just so.
 For you I wish sometime such joy as they
 This day have got — for such and more I pray.”

The child was gone, the good old man looked ’round,
 And there his wife and children four he found.
 The others were in cheerful homes not far;
 Their happiness no one nor dared nor cared to mar.

And now, kind friends, a toast let’s send to two Whose lives in part the old man told quite true.
 Let’s wish for them their love to last for aye —
 The love that’s theirs, their annivers’ry day.

Mr. JOHN PIATT, farmer, Monticello, was born near Brookville, Indiana, June 13, 1818. He came when a boy with his father, James A. Piatt, to what is now Piatt county, and has remained here ever since. For a number of years he resided on a farm one mile from Monticello, but now his home is six miles east of the town, near the border line of Champaign county. Mr. Piatt assisted in getting this county struck off by carrying petitions, and subsequently became its first sheriff. He has always been interested in the county, and has done his share for its advancement. On the 4th of September, 1846, John Piatt was united in marriage to Eliza Lowry, who was born February 1, 1827. They have had eight children, six of whom are now living. Eleanor is the wife of Dr. James Moffitt, of Monticello.

William M. married Penelope Minear, September 22, 1880, has one son, Samuel Milton, and resides on a 320-acre farm, six miles from Monticello. Belle Piatt and William Carnahan were married June 10, 1875, have four children, and live in Champaign city. B. T. Piatt and Sarah Minear were married September 9, 1875, have had four children, two of whom, Laura and Anzaletta, are living, and reside on their fine farm of 320 acres, six miles east of Monticello. Jennie, a graduate of the Monticello High School, and John are still living with their parents. Two of Mr. John Piatt's children, Emeline and Robert, are dead.

MR. JAMES A. PIATT, JR., was born near Brookville, Indiana, January 7, 1821, and when eight years old came with his parents to the present site of Monticello. With the exception of about five years in California, his entire life was spent in the immediate vicinity of Monticello. On the 18th of January, 1849, he was united in marriage to Katherine Bryden, a native of Nova Scotia, and one of the early school teachers of the county. Mr. and Mrs. Piatt, with their one child, Alice, started overland April 12, 1852, to California, via St. Louis and Kansas City—then Kansas Landing. Mrs. Piatt remarked in speaking of the trip, "I was not in a house from the time we left Kansas Landing until we reached California, and our little party had no company whatever from Humbolt Lake to Honcut, California. We saw plenty of Indians, but they were peaceful." After living there five years Mr. Piatt and family came back by way of the Isthmus of Darien and located on the farm he had previously bought near Monticello. In 1860 he built a nice brick house, which was burned about sixteen years ago. The house was rebuilt, and a brick barn has since been constructed. Mr. Piatt improved over 1,400 acres of land near Monticello. At the time of his death, April 8, 1873, he was living one mile south of Monticello, where his wife and daughter now reside. Alice Piatt and William H. Kratz were married January 7, 1875, and have two children, Laura and James Piatt. Mr. Kratz carries on quite an extensive lumber business in Monticello.

MR. RICHARD F. PIATT, of Napa City, California, was born in Elizabethtown, Indiana, March 31, 1823. After coming with his parents to Illinois he made Piatt county his home until near 1850, when he went to California. He returned to Illinois about 1856, and remained until the spring of 1857, when he went back by water to California. On his way there he became acquainted with Miss Fannie Peasley, who afterward became his wife. Two of their children, R. H. and Ida, are living. Mr. Piatt has discovered several valuable mines, and though having never been repaid for his long years of work in that direction, is still mining.

Mr. NOAH NOBLE PIATT was born in Indianapolis, February 24, 1828. He was the babe of the family when Mr. James A. Piatt moved to the Hayworth cabin, on the present site of Monticello. His boyhood and youthful days were spent in Piatt county. In 1855 he married Hannah Philipps, who was making her home at Wm. Piatt's. In 1857 he went to California, where he farmed near Marysville until about 1868. His wife died about this time, and Mr. Piatt with his daughters, Mattie, Clara and Kate, and son Willie, returned to Piatt county. After living here a time he married Miss Olive Bryden and soon went onto his farm, one mile east of Monticello. He sold this farm and went to Kansas about 1879, and now resides in Greenwood county, of that state. Mr. and Mrs. Piatt have three sons, Frank, Phil. and James.

Mr. JACOB PIATT, deceased, was born February 17, 1831, and is recorded as the first male child born within the limits of Piatt county. His entire life was spent in the immediate vicinity of his native place. When but a boy he resolved on being a merchant and began clerking for Daniel Stickel. He went to Cincinnati for the purpose of completing his commercial education, and while there became acquainted with Mary A. Hubbell, who became his wife March 1, 1853. During the rest of his life he was a merchant in Monticello. For a number of years previous to his death he was consumptive and an intense sufferer. His death occurred July 4, 1871. Six children survived him, five of whom are living now. Mary is now the wife of Dr. J. H. Carper, a successful physician of Monticello. Ford is successful as an express agent of St. Paul, Minnesota. Silas is a member of the class of 1883 of the Illinois University of Champaign. Jacob is in Monticello, while Will makes his home with his grandfather, Mr. Hubbell, of Cincinnati. Mrs. Jacob Piatt was married in 1877 to Mr. Harvey Benson. Her death occurred in the spring of 1880.

ANNABELLE PIATT, who was born at Lawrenceburg, Indiana, May 16, 1825, became the wife of Daniel Stickel. (See his sketch.)

MARY J. PIATT, who was born January 10, 1839, fell heir to a land warrant issued for services rendered by Mr. James A. Piatt during the Black Hawk war. The land is located in Nebraska. On June 5, 1860, she became the wife of Wm. Bryden, who for a number of years was a merchant of Monticello. During the last years of his life he was an invalid, and his death occurred February 5, 1866, in Savannah, Georgia. He had gone south for his health and was then on his way home. His last words were, "Peace on earth and good will to all." Mrs. Bryden and her two sons, Charles and Will, are still residing in Monticello.

The following facts relating to the first Piatts in America were obtained by Abram Piatt Andrew, Jr., of La Porte, Indiana, from a letter written by an old relative of the Piatts in Watsontown, Pennsylvania.

The first Piatt (John) was originally from France. In the city of Amsterdam, Holland, he married a widow, Mrs. Wycoff, nee Frances Vleet. They settled in New Jersey some years previous to the revolutionary war, and in 1760 were living at Six Mile Run, near the city of New Brunswick. This fact is shown by the following letter written by the same John Piatt from the Island of St. Thomas, in the West Indies, to his son in New Jersey.

Letter to John Piatt, addressed "Six Mile Run, New Jersey":

Dear Son,—I hereby let you know that I am yet alive and when I have said that I have said all I can say, for I am so very low and weak that I can scarcely hold my pen. I therefore only write you two or three lines, to let you know I have not forgot you. I am not able to stir out anywhere to see to getting some trinkets or other to send you by your brother Abraham, which otherwise I would have done. You told me in your letter you intended to come and see me as soon as your time was out. But I would not have you attempt it until you hear from me again, for if I live I shall leave this island very soon in order to recover my health, and if I live till next summer you may depend on seeing me at home. I would therefore advise you to stick close to your business and do the best you can for yourself. As to any further news, your brother Abraham can tell you. Give my love to your mother and all your brothers, and all inquiring friends.

I remain, your affectionate father,

St. Thomas, July 7, 1760.

JNO. PIATT.

This letter was probably his last writing, for before it reached New Jersey John and William Piatt, his sons, started for St. Thomas, and on their arrival found their father dead and buried. From another account other than that sent us by Mr. Andrew we understand that this John Piatt was poisoned by his negroes, and that his sons not only found their father dead, but his property all destroyed.

The sons, John, Abraham and William, returned to New Jersey, and John married Jane Williamson, March 27, 1763. In 1791 he was living in Pennsylvania, on the Susquehanna river, near Milton. He afterward moved farther up the river, and died at the age of seventy-nine years and nine months. He had five children, Jane, John, Frances, William and Catherine, all born in New Jersey. Jane married John Sedam, and had five children. Frances married William McKinney, and in 1818 moved to Wood county, West Virginia, where her descendants now live. Catherine married Abraham Tenbrook, and moved, in 1818, to Brookville, Indiana, and two of her children, John Tenbrook and Mrs. Ann Houselman, now live in Piatt county, Illinois. John Piatt married Elizabeth Cline, and two of their children are living at Watsontown, Pennsylvania—Mrs. Elizabeth McCormick, eighty-eight years of age, and Mrs. Jane P. Allen, in her eighty-second year. William Piatt married Mary Brady, and in 1881 three of their children were living, two at Watsontown, Pennsylvania, and one in Wyoming county, Pennsylvania.

It seems that the first John Piatt referred to had four sons, John, Jacob, William and Abraham. John, as has just been related, settled in Pennsylvania, as Abraham also did, and the other brothers came west to Ohio and Kentucky.

MR. ABRAHAM PIATT, son of the first Piatt who came to America, and father of James A. Piatt, for whom this county was named, was born in New Jersey and afterward moved to Pennsylvania, where it is supposed he died November 13, 1791. His wife nee Anna Belle Andrew, died April 16, 1822, at the house of her eldest son, Jacob, and was buried in Hamilton, Butler county, Ohio. They had ten children, four sons and six daughters.

Jacob, the eldest son, moved to Ohio, was twice married, and lived there till his family was nearly grown, when he moved to near Perryville, Indiana. He then moved to Henry county, Illinois, where Wm. H. Piatt thinks he died. Some of his children's names are: Abraham, who died in Altona, James who moved to near St. Mary's, Kansas, and John, who for twenty-three years was county commissioner and supervisor in Henry county, and died there a short time ago; while Anna Belle and William are names of other members of the family.

Abraham Piatt settled in Butler county, Ohio. (See Michael Piatt's sketch.)

John Piatt was never married. At an early day he went to New Orleans to trade, and while there was murdered and robbed.

For Jas. A. Piatt, see his sketch.

Catharine Piatt became the wife of Mr. Jas. Andrew. (See Jno. Andrew's sketch.)

Fannie Piatt married James Watson, and had three sons,

Abraham, William and James, who settled near Crawfordsville, Indiana, and who are all dead now.

Eleanor married John McDonald, and had three sons and one daughter, now Mrs. F. A. Marsh. Joseph McDonald, ex-senator of Indiana, is eminent as a lawyer in Indianapolis. For James McDonald, see his sketch. Zeke McDonald now resides in California.

Jane Piatt married James Carnahan, and had three sons, William, Abraham and John. Of these William is the only one living. Of the four daughters, Anna married the Rev. Theo. Adams, of the Christian church, and they both are dead. Mary married Mr. Hubbell, has her sister Amanda with her, and lives in Cincinnati.

Anna Piatt married Wm. Hart and settled in southern Indiana. She had several sons, who are supposed to be living in Clinton county, Iowa.

Margaret Piatt married Mr. John Eccles, a preacher of the Methodist Episcopal church, and had a number of children.

Hon. Donn Piatt, of Mac-o-cheek, Ohio, writes us that all he knows of his ancestors was obtained through his father of his grandfather, Jacob Piatt, of Boone county, Kentucky. This Jacob Piatt was a native of New Jersey. He entered the revolutionary war as a private, fought his way up to colonel, and was at one time on the staff of Gen. Washington, taking part in all the important battles of the war. "He was a Puritan of the purest type, having the Huguenot traits strongly marked in him." He gave his pension to the support of a clergyman. His tomb at Federal Hall bears the following suggestive epitaph :

A SOLDIER OF THE REVOLUTION AND A SOLDIER OF THE CROSS.

This Jacob Piatt told Donn Piatt's father that the first Piatts in America were two brothers, who went from France to Amsterdam, and, after marrying there, came to New York. One of these settled in New Jersey, while the other went to the West Indies, where he was murdered by his negroes.

Gen. Piatt, a brother of Donn Piatt, also resides at Mac-o-cheek, Ohio.

WILLIAM PIATT was born June 29, 1795, at La Grange, Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, and died there in December 1875. His father, John Piatt, settled in Pennsylvania. William was a farmer and tanner by profession. He was a captain of the 1st Lycoming Troop Cavalry for some twenty years, a ruling elder of the Presbyterian church for twenty years, a member of the Pennsylvania legislature, and associate judge of Lycoming county. He married Hannah Brady, who was born at Milton, Pennsylvania, April 2, 1799, and who was a niece of Capt. John Brady and Gen. Hugh Brady, the celebrated Indian fighters. Of their children, James B. Piatt, who was born July 10, 1821, in La Grange, Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, was a captain in the Lycoming Troop Cavalry for ten years. He is now a farmer at Tipton, Iowa. H. C. Piatt, born March 24, 1824, is a graduate of the Jefferson College, Pennsylvania, and is now a wealthy lawyer of Tipton, Iowa. McCall Piatt was born August 4, 1829, and is carrying on a tan-yard on the farm where his father was born and where he died. His eldest sister, Mary, lives with him. Betty married William McCormick and died some thirteen years ago, leaving six children. Charlotte Piatt married Frank Porter and died about five years ago. Mr. Abner Piatt was born in La Grange, Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, March 27, 1827. His youth was spent as a tanner and civil engineer, and he was educated at Lewisburg Academy. For ten years he was a member of the 1st Lycoming Troop Cavalry, and he was also major of a military company of Lycoming county. For a number of years he has been a stock commission merchant in Chicago, Illinois. He married Anne M. Murphy, and has four children: Hammond, Harry, Emma and Anna.

MR. MICHAEL PIATT, St. Louis, is a native of Butler county, Ohio. His education was obtained and his youth was spent in that state. He moved from Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1857, and at present resides at 3614 N. Ninth street, St. Louis, Missouri. He was horse inspector for three and a half years during the war, at present is a veterinary surgeon, and, in fact, has been in the horse business all his life. He was married in 1837, to E. D. Kirk, and they have had eight children.

MR. ABRAHAM PIATT, father of Michael Piatt, was born in Pennsylvania, and was a farmer, having held the offices of constable and sheriff.

MR. JOHN ANDREW, brother of Anna Belle (Andrew) Piatt, was a surgeon in the patriot army during the entire revolutionary war. He was married twice, and had a large family of children.

MR. JAMES ANDREW, the eldest of the family, married Catharine Piatt, sister of James A. Piatt. She died June 27, 1828, and her husband March 21, 1851. They had eight children: the youngest, Anna Bella, died when a babe, and John died September 2, 1819. The rest of the family are all living, and, with the exception of Jacob P., reside in La Porte, Indiana. James is in his eighty-fourth year. Abraham P.

Andrew is in his eighty-second year, is in "good health and active in mind and body." The 1st of October, 1882, was the fifty-third anniversary of his marriage to Viola J. Armstrong, who is in her seventy-seventh year. Lewis C. Andrew is in his seventy-fourth year, while William is seventy-two years old. Rachel married Sutton Van Pelt, who died not long ago. Jacob Piatt Andrew is in his seventy-ninth year, and has been a preacher of the Christian church for over sixty years. He graduated at the Cincinnati Medical College, and for over fifty years was a practicing physician. His eldest son, Lieut. A. C. Andrew, was killed in the Union army September 20, 1863. His youngest son, William H., died in his fifteenth year. His daughter, Phebe A. Clark, has several children.

DR. E. A. PYATT, of Bethany, Illinois, writes that his grandfather, named Joseph, was born in Coventry, England. His father, also named Joseph, was born in Bush county, North Carolina. Dr. Pyatt was born October 9, 1832, in North Carolina, and lived on a farm and went to school in the country up to the age of eighteen, when he entered Burnsville College, and remained two years. He studied medicine, and in 1856 began practicing the same in Sullivan county, Tennessee. Soon after he graduated in the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He was surgeon in the late war three years, and at the close of the war married a lady of Abingdon, Washington county, Virginia. In 1868 he located at Bethany, Moultrie county, where he has been in active practice since.

Mrs. Ann Honselman, daughter of Catharine and John Piatt, was married in 1832, and in 1839 came to Piatt county. Of her children, William was born in 1834, James, in 1836; Abraham, in 1838; Caroline, in 1841, and Melissa, in 1843. She still resides in Monticello and is yet a characteristic pioneer woman. Let one who would like to catch a glimpse of the early days step into her cabin, and she, in the midst of her pioneer surroundings, will delight to tell of the days that are no more. She has a kind heart, a good memory, and is always pleased to take you back into the past, where she will find for you many a gem by the wayside.

Chas. O. Piatt, Decatur, Illinois, was born near Bellefontaine, Logan county, Ohio, August 16, 1847. His mother died when he was thirteen months old, and he then lived with his grandmother Piatt until he was thirteen years old. His father married again, and with his family moved to DeWitt county in 1854, where he still resides. In 1860 C. O. Piatt came from Ohio to his father's farm, where he stayed until he was eighteen years old, since which time he has been making his own way. He had gained a good common and high school education, and taught several terms of school in DeWitt county. He afterward went into the grain trade, which business he is still in, and is associated in the firm W. L. Dumont & Co., of Decatur. Mr. Piatt was married March 7, 1871, to Flora C., granddaughter of Wm. Clagg. They have had two children, one of whom died at the age of four years, and the other is still living. Mr. Piatt's name was John and his grandfather, also named John, moved from Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, to Ohio at an early day.

CHAPTER XI.

MONTICELLO TOWNSHIP.

THE center of Piatt county lies within Monticello township, which may justly be called the principal township of the county, since it contains the county seat, and has more inhabitants than any other in the county. In size it is one of the four smallest townships in the county. The distance across the township from west to east is eight miles, while from the northern boundary to the southern it is six miles; the entire township thus contains forty-eight square miles or 30,720 acres of land. On the north the township is bounded by Goose Creek and Sangamon townships; a portion of Champaign county forms the eastern boundary; while Bement township bounds it on the south and Willow Branch on the west.

A ridge strikes the township in the southern-western or southern part, and runs diagonally to the northeast, thus making some of the land of the township slightly rolling. The drainage—except in the extreme southeastern part, where the sluggish waters of the Lake Fork stand a portion of the year—is very good. The entire western, northern and northeastern parts drain into the Sangamon river, which crosses the northwestern corner of the township. A generous belt of timber follows the course of this river, but the greater portion of the township is fine tillable prairie land. Some clay is found on the hills near the Sangamon river, but the greater portion of soil is a rich black loam, such as all farmers rejoice to see.

The early settlements of the township coincide with those already mentioned of the county, since the first settlements of the county were made in what is now Monticello township. The Hayworths, Daggotts and Martins all located in the northwestern corner of this township, and others of the pioneers made settlements within its boundaries. Since the location of many of the first settlers of the township is alluded to elsewhere in the book, it is not necessary to mention the same in this connection.

Monticello township, in common with other portions of the county, was once a part of Macon county. After the formation of Piatt county it became a portion of one of the precincts of the new county, and it was not until 1860, when the township organization was introduced, that it became a township.

Two railroads, both of which are now in possession of the Wabash Railroad Company, pass through a portion of the township. The one originally known as the Champaign & Decatur railroad, and which was first constructed, strikes the northern line of the township about two miles from the western boundary line, runs nearly south about two miles, making an abrupt bend within the city limits of Monticello, and then extends west nearly three miles to the western boundary line of the township. The other railroad, which was built under the name of the Chicago & Paducah, passes almost directly north and south through the township, about two miles from the western boundary line. These roads intersect at Monticello, where one depot serves the purposes of both roads.

In regard to the wagon roads of this township, as also we might say of all the townships, that in some places they are comparatively good, but portions of the roads are in very poor condition. Some of the grades are all right but the bridges seem invariably out of order. Again, the bridges are all right, when the roads are not graded or drained as well as they might be, even with the proper materials at hand for doing so. What is the cause of all of this? Can it be that the people of Piatt county do not take an interest in their roads? No, the trouble does not lie there, for certainly there is scarce a business person in the county who is not financially interested in the roads of the county. Of course all are interested in having good roads, but do they apply their interest in the best way for removing the obstacles in the way of the best possible roads for the least money and labor? Which would be the best for any set of roads—to have several “road bosses,” with a number of men, oftentimes those who seem to take no interest save to work out their taxes, and many times green hands at the work, and those who perhaps do not even live in the county, but are taken by some farmer from the field to work out his tax; or to employ one man who was to obtain a set of hands and keep the road in order for the season? If one man had a road in charge, he, as well as everybody else, would know whose business it was to fill up a chuck-hole, to drain the water from a low place in the road before a great mud-hole resulted, or to mend a broken plank in a bridge. If he did his duty—and it would be very easy to get rid of him if he did not—we would not hear so many expressions as the following: “Why don’t some one fix this grade?” “Why don’t they scrape these roads?” etc. It is our opinion, as well as of them with whom we have talked, that such arrangement would vastly improve the condition of the roads, while, instead of being more expensive, it would really be money in the pockets of the people. What farmer can afford to wait until his summer work is done, and then work out his tax on the road, just in time for the fall rains to prevent the grades settling for the winter season? Would it not have been better for him to take the money out of his pocket and pay his tax toward securing a man to do the work in proper season than to work out his tax at a wrong season, and then later in the year jostle over the side-boards of his wagon enough grain, wear out enough of his wagon, and lose enough time over bad roads, to more than pay for his tax? Let us have fewer men on the road, and see that they are under a good leader, and have the roads worked when they need it, not when most convenient to the people, and we feel convinced that the roads of the county will soon be in a vastly better condition than they now are.

Improvements.—Outside of the city of Monticello, there are not very many improvements other than those formed by the putting of the farms into good shape. A mill on the Sangamon river has been of good service to the entire county. The original mill was owned by a stock company. Mr. Zorger probably bought the mill of the stock-owners, and Mr. Collins bought of him, and built a part of the present mill building. Mr. Collins sold out to Emanuel Rhoades, who sold to Mr. Martin McIntosh, the present owner. At present some ten or fifteen thousand bushels of grain are ground a year, and preparations are being made for more extensive work. For many years a saw mill has been in connection with the grist mill. In 1881 a new forty-five horse power engine from the Decatur Novelty works was put in the mill.

Monticello.—In 1837 the citizens of what is now Piatt county concluded that it was too far to go to Decatur for trading purposes, and they resolved to have a town of their own. Abraham Marquiss, William Barnes, Major McReynolds and James A. Piatt formed the committee which, after searching up and down both sides of the Sangamon river, decided that the present site of Monticello was the most appropriate place for the location of a village. This land was once owned by James A. Piatt, who sold part of his land. A joint stock company was formed by these men and a town was laid out on the site of a portion of the present city of Monticello. On July 1, 1837, the town of Monticello was recorded. It was platted by James A. Piatt, surveyed by Mr. McClelland, and named by Major McReynolds after the home of Jefferson. Right here let us remark, that one would have to search long and well ere a prettier name for the town could be found.

On July 4, 1837, a grand barbecue was held. Beeves, hogs and sheep were roasted, and altogether there was a regular feast and jubilee. The prime object of the gathering was the sale of lots in the new town, and the result was the sale of some $2,700 worth of lots.

The original plat of Monticello did not include the Hayworth house, which is still standing north of the Wabash depot. So this first house in the county was not the first house in the original Monticello. However, as the limits of Monticello now extend far beyond this cabin, it is justly called the oldest house in the city. In about 1839 there were but four houses in the new town. The first house put up was a small storehouse, which stood on the present site of Dr. Noecker's drug store. This house was built about 1837 by Mr. Cass, who dealt in merchandise on a very small scale. In 1839 Mr. Nicholas Devore began the erection of the first dwelling house in Monticello as originally laid out. This building originally had four rooms, and was not completed for several years. Judge Ricketts assisted in the building of the house and it existed for a number of years, bearing the name of "old Fort." Jno. Tenbrooke built, on the site of Jno. Lowry's store, a log house in which he kept hotel, and which was the second dwelling house in the village. The third dwelling house was erected by James Outten just opposite the present jail. About this time, too, a Mr. Hull had a little blacksmith shop near where Mrs. Ann Honselman lives.

Such was the beginning of Monticello. It was not long, however, until more residences were erected, business buildings were put up and a number of other improvements were made. Daniel Stickel, in 1841, opened the first regular store in the town in a building just east of W.

H. Reese's drug store; J. C. Johnson opened the first drug store and was the first regular postmaster. Dr. King was the first physician who settled in Monticello. The first lawyer of the town (we could not learn his name), after living here three or four months, started for California, but died on the way. The first preaching in the town was at Mr. Outten's house, where a circuit-rider of the Methodist Episcopal church used to stop once a month. In 1843 and 1844 the Rev. Peter Cartwright held meetings in the old court-house. Rev. Cartwright also conducted several camp-meetings in this county. Mr. Mosher conducted the first camp-meeting of the county in a grove a little southwest of the present Wabash depot. The first church in the town was built in 1848 by Judge Ricketts and others. It belonged to the Methodists and stood on the present site of Mr. Kiser's residence. In 1843 Judge Ricketts built the first court-house. The second was built about 1856 by Judge Ricketts, George Dempsey and Jno. Lowry.

In 1856 quite a good deal of business was done in Monticello. In the "Monticello Times" of that date we find that T. Milligan and H. C. McComas advertised as attorneys-at-law; N. G. Coffin, Noecker & Hull and T. Wheeler as physicians; R. B. Winchester as saddle and harness maker; Marbleston & Bro. as clothiers; J. E. Duncan as tailor; Young & Co. as furniture dealers; J. H. Hollingsworth, O. Bailey, Piatt & Kerr, and Bruffett & Foster as dry-goods merchants; J. C. Johnson & Bro. as druggists; Dunseth & Shroeder as bricklayers; D. Kelleher as boot and shoe merchant; B. T. Meeks as hardware merchant; David Cornpropst as grocer, and John Painter as butcher. Were we to go into details and mention each business firm in Monticello of to-day a great improvement would be seen in the amount of business done now and that done in 1856.

Under Gen. Grant's second term the postoffice of Monticello was changed from a fourth to a third class office. Mr. Samuel Webster is the present able postmaster. His bond is $16,000. It seems to be the opinion of the people that Monticello could not have a better postmaster than Mr. Webster has proved to be.

Monticello a City.—On the 10th of April, 1872, the president and trustees of Monticello met for the purpose of taking steps to change the village government to that of a city.

At that time L. J. Bond was president; Chas. Watts, E. G. Knight, J. M. Holmes and Samuel Bender were trustees, and W. D. Shultz, clerk. The population of the town was reported to be 1,060 souls, and the government was changed so as to comply with the law in regard to city government. A mayor and six aldermen were elected, but the city is not yet laid off in wards.

At the election of December 17, 1872, Daniel Stickel was made the first mayor, and Wm. T. Foster, B. B. Jones, E. G. Knight, J. A. Hill, John Keenan and James M. Holmes, alderman. Wm. D. Shultz was made clerk, A. T. Pipher, attorney, and J. T. Vangundy, treasurer. Daniel Stickel was mayor two terms. The term of C. P. Davis was finished out by S. H. Hubbell. Samuel Reed and Wm. H. Plunk each held the office one term, and Mr. Bert Emerson is the present mayor. Wm. Shultz has been clerk most of the time since city government was enforced. There has been no saloon license since the organization under city government. At present the population of the city is about 1,800 persons.

Monticello was held back, and grew slowly, a number of years on account of having no railroads; but since the building of the first railroad a steady and quite rapid improvement has been going on.

Monticello of to-day contains three churches: the Methodist, Presbyterian and German Methodist; two school buildings and two hotels. The High school building is of brick and is in the south part of the city, while the frame building is in the northern part. The brick hotel is under good management and is near the public square. Joseph Mallory has recently become proprietor of the other hotel, and with his ability as landlord and with his wife's culinary skill, we may anticipate a first-class hotel. The first grain elevator in Monticello was erected in 1872, by Piatt, Hubbel & Co. Its capacity is about 15,000 bushels. In 1878 a grist mill was connected with the elevator, and both are now owned by E. A. Townly & Co. In 1876 Knight & Tinder erected an elevator on what was then the Chicago & Pacific railroad. Its capacity is 20,000 bushels. There are two lumber yards and two livery stables in the place. J. W. Race & Co. have three rooms on the east side of the public square, which are devoted to merchandising purposes. There are a number of other grocery, clothing and merchandising stores in the city, mention of which will be found elsewhere. The business center of the city is found in the vicinity of the public square.

Rhodes block, on the northeast corner of the square, was built in 1874. It contains an opera hall 40×90 feet, which has a seating capacity for over 500 persons. The building is of brick and has three stories and a basement.

Dr. Noecker's block, in connection with the brick hotel, a little northwest of the square, is another addition to the appearance of the place. The brick block formed by the buildings occupied by Mr. Julius Brown, Mr. John Davison, Messrs. Bohn & Vangundy, and Mr. Dickerson, adds greatly to the appearance of the southwestern corner of the square. Another brick building is on the south side of the square, while the eastern side is also partly built up with brick buildings. While the people are very well satisfied with the appearance of the public square, yet all are waiting anxiously for the removal of some of the old one-story frame business houses and the erection of brick buildings in their stead. Monticello is improving rapidly now, and we hope to see this change soon.

Monticello has two cemeteries, the old one which joins the west side of the city, and the new one which is situated over a mile north of Monticello. Not a city of its size in central Illinois can boast of nicer and neater residences than some in Monticello.

The Churches.—There was preaching in Piatt county a number of years before there was any organized church, and this preaching was done by ministers of various denominations. After a time there were some resident ministers in the county, among whom we can mention Mr. Welch and Mr. Harshbarger, of the Christian church.

In regard to the Methodist Episcopal church of Monticello, we could not gain a great deal from the records. The first quarterly conference recorded is that of November 23, 1843, with W. D. Trotter, presiding elder, and Addison Godrid, pastor in charge.

The first Methodist Episcopal church building was begun when James C. Rucker was pastor in charge. A great revival meeting was held in 1857, when about 400 joined the church by letter and on probation. Camp Creek church was built about 1860, dedicated by Granville Moody, of Ohio, and a subscription was raised to liquidate the debt. The war reduced the membership on the circuit very much.

In September, 1868, Monticello was constituted as a station, with a membership of 138, in two classes—four local preachers, one exhorter, R. W. Travis, presiding elder, and Ira Emerson, pastor in charge. During 1868–70 the new Methodist church was begun. We have been informed that Mr. B. F. Harris, of Champaign, nominally donated the lot to the church. The building is of brick, and was dedicated to church purposes December 17, 1870, by the Rev. H. Buck. This church has been existing a number of years under a load of debt amounting to over $3,000. Owing to the undiminished labors of G. S. Alexander, who has recently left his field of labors in Monticello, this debt has been lifted.

The following are the names of the presiding elders and pastors in charge, as recorded in the Methodist Episcopal church record-book :

Presiding Elders — John S. Barger, 1847 ; C. D. James, 1851 ; G. W. Fairbank, 1854 ; Samuel Elliott, 1885 ; L. C. Pintner, 1857 ; Hiram Buck, 1859 ; R. W. Travis, 1861.

Pastors in Charge — L. C. Pitner, 1846 ; James C. Rucker, 1847 ; I. L. Green, 1848 ; W. J. Newman, 1849 ; Joseph Lane, 1849 ; A. Doncarloss, 1850 ; William C. Blundell, 1852 ; Christain Arnold, 1854 ; Miles A. Wright, 1856 ; John H. Scott, assistant pastor ; Edward Rutledge, 1857 ; B. F. Lodge, assistant pastor ; A. R. Garner, 1859 ; W. B. Anderson, assistant pastor ; Isaac Grove, 1861-62 ; D. P. Lyon, 1864 ; J. B. Houts, 1865 ; James T. Orr, 1867 ; Ira Emerson, 1868 ; J. S. Orr, 1868-70 ; W. H. H. Adams, 1870-72 ; P. C. Carroll, 1872 ; George M. Fortune, 1873 ; I. Villars, 1874 ; Mr. Everhart, 1875 ; J. Montgomery, 1876 ; J. A. Muse, 1877 ; D. Gay, 1878 ; G. S. Alexander, 1879-80-81.

The membership of the church is nearly 200.

Sketch of the Presbyterian Church of Monticello, as reported by Rev. Ormsby.—The Presbyterian church of Monticello was organized on Saturday, October 27, 1842, by Rev. Joseph Adams, then preaching to the church of Ashmore, Coles county. But previous to that time there had been occasional Presbyterian preaching, and Rev. William Hutchinson, a Cumberland Presbyterian of Champaign county, had preached stately as often as once a month for perhaps a year. So far as I have been able to ascertain, he was the first Presbyterian minister to preach in Monticello. Mr. Adams was appointed a committee to organize the church, by Palestine presbytery, Old School. It consisted, at the organization, of the following ten members, all of them uniting by letter from other places, namely : James Huston, Sarah Huston, Mary Neyhart, Archibald Moffitt, Samuel Moffitt, James J. Patterson, Anna Patterson, Elizabeth Young, Hugh O'Neal and Mary O'Neal.

At an election held the same day, James Huston and Archibald Moffitt were chosen ruling elders. The church remained, however, without regular services for about a year, when, in December, 1851, Rev. R. H. Lilly, of Champaign, was engaged to preach half his time for one year. He may have continued longer. The church was then destitute for several years, and became very much reduced by deaths and removals, losing both its elders by death. However, a committee of Palestine presbytery again visited it, and on October 31, 1857, received five additional members, and took measures for its reorganization. About the beginning of 1858 Rev. John Huston took charge. He remained some six years, preaching part of his time in Monticello, and the rest in neighboring school-houses, especially the Morain school-house, and another near what is now De Land, where there was at that time a small Presbyterian organization, since disbanded. Mr. Huston is well entitled to be considered as the real founder of the church, and endured toils and self-denials for it such as few other men would have done. Some time in the summer of 1865 he removed to southern Illinois, and is now supplying the churches of Goshen and Princeton, Missouri.

In the fall the services of Rev. T. P. Emerson were obtained part of his time for one or two years. He was succeeded by Rev. J. H. Dinsmore, of Louisville presbytery, who was so much of an invalid that he was employed to preach only so much as "his state of health might enable him." Early in 1869 the services of Rev. S. A. Hummer were obtained, who continued in charge about three years. During the last year of his stay with the church, 1871, its house of worship was built. Previously the public services had been held in the court-house, and part of the time in the old Methodist Episcopal church. The house is of wood, on a brick foundation, having a pleasant audience room of 35×60 feet, and a tower and belfry in front. It was built under the supervision of J. M. Combs, architect, and cost about $4,000. It was paid for by subscriptions of money and work given in the community, and a grant of $700 from the Board of Church Erection. The ladies' aid society of the church purchased its furniture—stoves, chandeliers, chairs, carpets, etc.—and paid for the frescoing. It seats comfortably about 300, and has a bell weighing one thousand pounds.

After Mr. Hummer left, the church remained unsupplied for about a year, when Rev. William R. Glen became its pastor, and continued in that relation two years, the only regularly installed pastor the church has ever had. After his removal it had only occasional and transient supplies until July 1, 1876, when Rev. A. F. Ashley took charge of it. Under his ministries, in the following January, occurred the most considerable revival it has ever enjoyed in all its history. As the fruits of that revival twenty-one stood up together at the February communion to profess their faith in Christ, ranging from the grey-haired man of seventy to the child of ten. Several others were received later. Mr. Ashley remained in charge some three years, after which he labored a short time in neighboring churches, and in the spring of 1880 removed to Ishpeming, Michigan, where he is at present.

June 13, 1880, Rev. M. P. Ormsby became stated supply, and is still occupying the field.

Owing to its frequent destitutions of preaching, the many changes that have taken place in the community, and other causes, the church has had but a slow growth. Out of nearly 200 members, first and last connected with it, it has only eighty remaining at present. But the last ten years, since the building of its house, it has been making constant progress, and has promising prospects for the future.

Fraternal Lodge, No. 58, A. F. and A. M.—The charter of Fraternal Lodge, No. 48, is dated October 4, 1848, and is consequently among the older charters in the state. It is signed by William Lanely, the then Grand Master of Masons of the State of Illinois, and also by E. R. Roe, D.G.M., J. C. Ketcham, G.S.W., Wm. C. Hobbs, G.J.W., and Wm. Mitchel, G. Sec. The charter members were Peter K. Hull, Master; Wm. Laforge, S.W.; R. Carlyle, J.W.; also J. J. Patterson, Wm. Marquiss, John P. Tenbrook and J. C. Johnson. The first meeting of the lodge was, however, held under dispensation on "the night of the 1st Monday in March, 1848." At this meeting all of what were afterward charter members were present, and in addition thereto we find the name of Samuel Bender on record. At this meeting the petition of Robert O. Parantea, of Logan county, was received and referred to a committee. At a regular communication held May 1, 1848, the lodge did its first work, the degree of E.A. being at that time conferred upon Allen Sadorus, George Matsler, G. W. Fisher and Henry Zorger. The regular communications of the lodge are held on the evening of Saturday of each month coming on or before the full of the moon. The meetings are held in the hall owned by the lodge, comprising the third floor of the brick block northwest of the public square in Monticello. At the present time the lodge consists of eighty-one members. The officers' names are as follows: Joseph E. Evans, W.M.; Henry W. Keyes, S.W.; Samuel Cole, J.W.; W. J. Britton, Treas.; J. A. Hill, Sec.; G. A. Burgess, S.D.; Joshua Tatman, J.D.; Henry Sackriter, Jr., S.S.; William Baldwin, J.S.; Wm. Worsley, Tyler; J. H. Carper, Marshal.

Markwell Chapter, No. 48, R. A. M.—Markwell Chapter was organized January 25, 1859, under a dispensation granted N. D. Elwood, Grand High Priest of the Grand Royal Arch Chapter of the State of Illinois, by Companion Levi Lusk, acting as high priest. At this meeting the chapter conferred the degree of Mark Master on Charles Watts, it being their first work. The returns to the grand chapter show the following named companions as officers and members for the year 1859, viz: Peter K. Hull, H.P. ; James J. Patterson, King ; A. G. Boyer, Scribe ; Wm. Noecker, C.H. ; B. Cassell, P.S. ; James A. Hill, R.A.C. ; Charles Watts, G.M. 3d V. ; Wm. T. Foster, G.M. 2d V. ; L. J. Bond, G.M. 1st V. ; Charles Watts, Sec. ; John Mosgrove, Treas. ; M. M. Harshbarger, Sent. Members : J. O. Sparks, F. E. Bryant, T. T. Pettit, Charles Marquiss and S. H. Bender. At the present time the chapter consists of forty-four members and the following named officers, viz: Harvey E. Huston, H.P. ; Caleb A. Tatman, King ; Richard T. Ayer, Scribe ; Henry W. Keyes, C.H. ; Gilbert A. Burgess, P.S. ; Wm. J. Britton, R.A.C. ; Joshua Tatman, M. 3d V. ; Samuel Cole, M. 2d V. ; Joseph E. Evans, M. 1st V. ; Henry Sackriter, Treas. ; Samuel B. Webster, Sec. ; Wm. B. Worsley, Sent. The charter is dated September 30, 1859. The regular convocations have been held, ever since the organization of the chapter, on the evening of Thursday on or before the full of the moon in each month.

Monticello Council, No. 27, R. and S. M.—This council was organized under dispensation on August 31, 1866. The charter was dated October 4, 1860, and the following are the names of the first officers, who were also the charter members : A. T. Pipher, T.I.G.M. ; Charles Watts, D.G.G.M. ; J. C. Johnson, P.C.W. ; E. P. Fisher, M. of E. ; L. J. Bonn, Recorder ; Wm. Noecker, C. of G. ; N. Henline, C. of C. ; J. A. Piatt, Sent. The council at present consists of nineteen members, and the following named officers, viz: E. A. Barringer, T.I.G.M. ; A. T. Pipher, D.I.G.M. ; J. R. Dove, P.C. of W. ; James M. Holmes, Recorder ; J. C. Johnson, M. of E. ; Wm. Noecker, C. of G. ; L. J. Bond, C. of C. ; E. P. Fisher, Steward ; Wm. Worsley, Sent. The regular convocations of the council are held on the evening of the second Tuesday in each month, at the Masonic Hall in Monticello.

The foregoing matter relative to the several lodges was furnished us by H. E. Huston.

Fraternal Encampment.—The Fraternal Encampment, No. 145, I.O.O.F., was organized July 9, 1873. The charter members were Joseph T. Van Gundy, Wm. E. Smith, James Honselman, Louis Katz, John Kousho, Henry Sackriter and James C. Harrington. The following presiding officers were installed when instituted: Jos. T. Van Gundy, C.P. ; Louis Katz, H.P. ; Jas. C. Harrington, S.W. ; Jas.

Honselman, J. W.; Wm. E. Smith, Scribe; John Kousho, Treas. The presiding officers installed January 2, 1882, are Jos. T. Van Gundy, C.P.; Wm. E. Smith, H. P.; J. A. Brown, S.W.; Wm. A. Baldwin, J.W.; Emmett H. Ormsby, Scribe; Francis A. Tate, Treas. The membership is thirty and the encampment meets on the first and third Mondays of each month in the Odd-Fellows' hall, over J. A. Brown's store.

Selah Lodge.—The Selah Lodge, No. 403, I.O.O.F., was organized August 26, 1869. The following are the names of the charter members: Alonzo T. Pipher, James C. Harrington, Wm. D. Shultz, Michael Hazzard, Jacob McClain, Pierre Hahn. The following presiding officers were installed at time of organization: Alonzo T. Pipher, N.G.; James C. Harrington, V. G.; Wm. D. Shultz, Rec. Sec.; Michael Hazzard, Treas. The presiding officers installed in July, 1882, are Geo. R. Baldwin, N.G.; Francis A. Tate, V.G.; E. H. Ormsby, Rec. Sec.; F. G. Stevens, Per. Sec.; Christian Wengenroth, Treas. The membership is fifty-two. The lodge meets on Tuesday evening of each week in their hall over J. A. Brown's hardware store, on the west side of the square, Monticello, Illinois.

Monticello Mutual Building, Loan and Homestead Association.—This association was organized in 1873 with a capital of $100,000 divided into 1,000 shares of $100 each. The original stock was held by 169 different persons, who took from one to twenty shares each, on which they paid at the rate of fifty cents a month for each share held, respectively. The money arising from these payments, together with the interest accumulating on the same, was loaned and re-loaned to the members of the association. It was the design that everything paid to the association in the way of fees should be applied to advancing the value of the stock until it should arrive at par value, at which time the association would go into liquidation, and the mortgages executed by the borrowing members would be offset and canceled by their stock. The association flourished until the hard times came on, when it was thought advisable by the board of directors to wind up the affairs as soon as possible, which has accordingly been done, excepting as to a few matters that are in litigation in the supreme court, in one of which, being the Smythe case, the constitutionality of the law under which such associations are organized has been attached. This case was once decided adversely to the association, but a re-hearing was granted. These associations have been successful in other states, particularly in Pennsylvania and Ohio, and are claimed to be very beneficial to communities. There have been no losses by the stockholders in Monticello, and probably some money will be made. At present there are twelve stockholders.

CHAPTER XII.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MR. THOMAS ATER was born in Loudoun county, Virginia, in 1795. When but seven years old his father's family emigrated to Pickaway county, Ohio. After reaching the Ohio river they went down the stream in a "bitter-head" boat, and while on this voyage young Thomas came near losing his life; he fell overboard, and the folks had given him up just as his head appeared above the surface of the water, when an older brother seized him by the hair and dragged him into the boat. When seventeen years of age Thomas took the place of a brother who had been drafted in the war of 1812, and served throughout the entire war. He was under Gen. Harrison at Tippecanoe, and for his services in the war received a land warrant for 160 acres of land, but never received any benefit from the warrant. His wife, though, through the efforts of their son Edward, made use of the warrant after Mr. Ater's death. Mr. Thomas Ater, and Elizabeth Brown, who was born in Delaware in 1795, were united in marriage in 1813. Of their five children, who were born in Ohio, Edward was born in 1815; Solomon, in 1817; Willis, in 1819; Celia, in 1821; and John, in 1823. On October 11, 1827, Mr. Ater, with his family, started for Illinois. They reached Vermilion county the same month, and camped out until a homestead was procured. After living in Vermilion county eleven years, the entire family moved to what is now Piatt county, and settled near the Willow Branch. Mr. Ater died in 1852, and was buried near his last home. His faithful wife survived him many years, but died in 1877, and was buried beside her husband. A gentleman who was a resident of the county when Mr. Ater lived here, says of him: "He was a tall, well-made man.

Though uneducated, he had a fine mind, was an excellent farmer, and was noted far and near for his genial hospitality."

MR. EDWARD ATER was born in 1815 in Pickaway county, Ohio. When about twelve years old he moved with his parents to Vermilion county, Illinois. In 1838 he came to Piatt county to close up a contract for land, which his father had made. Upon reaching the county Edward expected to spend the first night at Mr. Clover's, but upon arriving there found the family all sick with the ague. He next went to Mr. Reber's, to find the same disease in the household. At Mr. West's he also found all sick, and when he reached the Piatt cabin Mr. Piatt had the typhoid fever, but a night's lodging was secured. This incident serves as but an illustration of what the early settlers suffered from the then prevalent malarial diseases. When Mr. Ater's family moved into Willow Branch township the following persons were residing there: Emanuel Clover, Washington Zinn, John Sea, Thomas Henderson, John West, James Reber, William Pratt, John Moore, Mr. Shuman, Mr. Widich and Mr. Dillow. Mr. Edward Ater and Lydia Greene were married in 1837. They had four children, two of whom were girls and died quite young. William Ater served four years in the late war, and died at thirty-six years of age, when on his way home from Missouri. Frank still lives in Piatt county. Mrs. Lydia Ater died in 1857, and Mr. Ater took as his second wife Margaret Cramer, of Ladoga, Indiana. Mr. Ater taught the first school in Willow Branch township, and was the second sheriff of the county, serving four years, and never drew any fee for his services. In 1846 he moved to Urbana, and while there served as county judge four years, and was also Mayor of Urbana four years. In 1871 he moved back to Monticello, and has since resided here. Mr. Ater is the only one of his father's family now living.

MR. FRANK ADKINS, farmer, Monticello, is a native of Ohio, and has been in Piatt county for many years. He was married to Mrs. H. Harris nee Nancy Jones in 1860. She is a native of Kentucky, her parents were of English and Irish descent. Mrs. Adkins married her first husband, Chas. W. Harris, a native of Virginia, and they moved to this county in the summer of 1844. He died of lung fever in 1858. They had four children: Martha P., who is the wife of L. W. Patterson, lives in Manhattan, Kansas, where they have lived for nearly eight years; William T. is a druggist, lives in Solomon, Kansas, and married Miss Hannah Rodgers; Fannie is the wife of Martin Fogleson, and has four children, Eloise, Charlie, Daisy and Frank; they live in Champaign; Edward lives on the home place, married Jane Persel, and has three children, Grace, Nannie and Charles. Nannie C. and her husband live on their farm near Abilene, Kansas. B. F. is at home.

REV. GEORGE S. ALEXANDER was born July 10, 1832, in Cumberland, Rhode Island. His youth was spent on a farm, and in a woolen factory, and his education was obtained in Rhode Island. He was married first on Cape Cod, March 11, 1856; again at Philo, Illinois, September 20, 1877, and has six children. Mr. Alexander has been a Methodist minister for number of years, and the last three years have been spent in doing most excellent work in the Monticello Methodist church. A short time ago he removed to Nebraska, where he is pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church of Syracuse, and editor of the Syracuse Journal, a weekly republican paper. MR. SAMUEL ALLERTON, of Chicago, is the largest land-holder of Piatt county. He owns 7,160 acres of land, most of which he has improved. Three houses have been erected on the land, a cut of one of which appears in this book. Mr. Allerton is quite an advocate of tiling, having had some fifteen miles of the same put in in 1882. In attempting to have an artesian well at Allerton Station, a well 286 feet deep was bored, which is the deepest well in the county. Some seven hundred head of cattle are fattened and sold each year from Mr. Allerton's farms. Mr. Allerton has traveled a great deal and his verdict is that nowhere in the old or new world has he found agricultural land surpassing that of Piatt county.

MR. JOHN ARNDT is of German descent and is a native of Pennsylvania. He moved from Pennsylvania to Ohio, and thence to Illinois. His father and mother came with him and lived in this county until their death, which occurred in 1867 and about 1865 respectively. After coming to this county Mr. Arndt married Mrs. Fannie Boyer. Her first husband, Mr. William Boyer, died leaving two children, George, who is now married and living in Champaign county, and Alice, who married Mr. A. Lord and lives in Sangamon township. They have four children, Frank, Fannie, Willie, and a babe. Mrs. Arndt died about 1863, leaving one child, Hattie, who still makes her home with her father. Part of her time, however, is spent in school teaching. Mr. Arndt was married the second time in 1867, to Mrs. Eliza Miller nee Eliza J. Graham. She was a native of Kentucky, and was married in that state in 1852, to Mr. James Miller, a school teacher. They moved to Monticello, Illinois, in 1852, and after one year's residence there moved to Mr. George Boyer's place near Centerville, where they lived until Mr. Miller was elected county clerk, when they moved to Monticello and lived till Mr. Miller's death in 1859. Mr. Wilson Cox finished out Mr. Miller's unexpired term as county clerk. Mr. Miller taught school several terms after coming to the county. He taught one term in the first school-house in Monticello. Two of Mr. Miller's children are now living. William A. Miller was married in May, 1881, to Ella Norris. He has taught quite a number of schools in this county, but at present is in a clothing store in Monticello. Miss Adaline is unmarried and lives at home.

Ireland is Mr. JAMES ALLMAN's native country. When but fifteen years old he moved from the southwestern part of the county of Kerry and landed in Piatt county in 1854. The sailing vessel in which they came over was wrecked near Nantucket Island. It struck some rocks and got fast on a sand-bar. No lives were lost but all the merchandise was unloaded. Two tugs succeeded in pulling the vessel into safe waters again. For eight and a half days the crew were apportioned one and a half pints of water for both drinking and cooking purposes. Two of Mr. Allman's brothers were already in America. Patrick was educated for a priest in Dublin, Ireland. He died in Piatt county without fulfilling the mission for which he was educated. John Allman was married, in Ireland, to Honora Cronan. After her death John went west and is supposed to be dead. His daughter, Mary, is keeping house for Mr. Edward Allman, who came to America at the time Mr. James Allman did, and who now lives on a fine farm in Monticello township. Mr. Allman's sister, Catharine, married Mr. Amos Stout, a farmer in Bement township. They have four children. For three years after coming to Piatt county Mr. James Allman worked on Mr. Calef's place; then for four or five years he worked for Mr. John Piatt. He soon bought 240 acres of land of Mr. James Bryden. To this amount of land he next added 360 acres which he bought of Mr. James Johnson. He also bought land of Mr. M. T. Scott, and some railroad land. He bought a portion of the farm he now lives on of Mr. George Campbell. In 1877 Mr. Allman married Miss Anna McSheffry, a native of Pennsylvania, but who at that time was a resident of Champaign county. She graduated at St. Mary's, Indiana, after an attendance of six years. They have had three children: Mary, Agnes C. and Margaret. Mr. James Allman is an example of what can be done by perseverance and hard work.

All that he has he made by sheer hard labor. He is a gentleman who is held in high esteem by the church and all his neighbors.

Barnes is a member of the class of '83 in the Monticello High School. Etta is also in school. We subjoin the following from Mr. Barnes' obituary: "Died, February 4, 1871, at his residence near Centerville, Mr. John Barnes, aged forty-eight years. He emigrated to this state when the country was new and sparsely settled. Hence, during his residence here, he became identified with the growing interests of the country, more especially with his immediate locality. Having a progressive spirit, he took an active interest in all measures that pertained to the welfare of the community, and in this particular his counsel was often obtained. As a citizen he was peaceable, and sought to allay all disturbing elements that threatened peace and harmony. Quiet and unostentatious in his movements, never seeking to make a display, or to gain a conspicuous elevation, and somewhat distrustful of his own powers; yet when the right had to be maintained in opposition to error, he never faltered for a moment, but perseveringly pursued the path of duty. In his commercial relations he was prompted by the principles of moral uprightness and integrity of purpose. Among all with whom he mingled he was distinguished by honesty and truthfulness. He was an instance of God's noblest work, 'an honest man.' He cultivated moral sentiment and was a regular attendant at church and the Sabbath school. Being a man of musical talent he invariably conducted the singing. He took an interest in inviting ministers to his neighborhood, and his home was often their abode during their transient visits. By his persevering industry he amassed considerable wealth, and was liberal with his means. The various objects of charity and the general enterprises of christianity were fully met. He was kind and indulgent to his family, and sought to render the home circle desirable and happy. He had recently built a handsome brick residence, and everything that contributed to make home a loved retreat flowed in uninterrupted harmony. The surroundings were pleasant and highly attractive. To all appearances he had reached the summit of earthly ambitions. But in the midst of this tide of social prosperity he was suddenly called to cross 'death's shadowy valley.' His sickness was of short duration, during which time he gave the future some consideration. When asked by a friend in regard to his preparation for death, he answered: 'That is all settled; my mind is perfectly clear.' His funeral was attended by the largest assemblage convened here on a like occasion. Mind possesses the mysterious power of assimilation, and may the surviving emulate his virtues, revere his memory, and cherish his rich legacy of an unsullied character.

Mr. SAMUEL BENDER, merchant, Monticello, is a native of Ohio, who came to Piatt county, Illinois, in 1842. They then moved near Monticello, Illinois, on a farm, where they remained until the death of Mr. Britton in 1856. Two children survived him. Wm. J. Britton married Miss Laura Dyer and at present is living in Monticello. They have had four children, two of whom, Nellie and Willie, are living. Johnny, the eldest of the family, showed remarkable While located here he dealt in real estate for a time. He built some fifteen or twenty houses in the town. After dealing for a time in real estate he farmed awhile and then went into merchandise. He had just gone out of this business at the time of his death, May 28, 1872. His death was quite sudden. In the morning of May 28, he had been preparing some horse medicine. Just a little while before he died he went into the kitchen at his home and asked for his sons, remarking that he thought he was going to die. In spite of all efforts to save him, he died in a very short time. Mr. Brittenham belonged to the I.O.O.F. lodge, and was an honored and respected citizen. His first wife died in 1857. His father was in the revolutionary war and three of his brothers were in the war of 1812. He started to the Mexican war, but returned. When the late war began, he went out for over a year, until he was crippled by the falling of his horse. After leaving the army he lost the use of one of his eyes. His early practice extended all over this county and oftentimes beyond its limits. He, in common with other early physicians in the county, suffered many inconveniences in traveling over the almost roadless country, which was traversed by swollen streams and covered with swampy ponds. Dr. Coffin was in the army from August, 1862, until July, 1865.

He was assistant surgeon in the 107th Ill. reg. and spent most of his time in hospitals. He was at the battle of Franklin, Tennessee, and at Nashville. During the year of 1881 Dr. Coffin changed his old office for a more commodious one of brick. Dr. Coleman received his academic education at Miami University, Oxford, Ohio, and at the Farmers' College, at College Hill, Ohio. He graduated at the latter school in 1853, and was one of a class of twelve, among whom were William Penn Nixon, of the "Chicago Inter Ocean," and Hon. William P. Fishback, of the United States court at Indianapolis, Indiana. His medical education was obtained at Miami College, Cincinnati, Ohio, where he graduated in 1856. In 1860 the subject of our sketch moved to Monticello, where he pursued the practice of his profession until 1862, when he was commissioned as assistant surgeon in the army in the 41st Ill., under Col. Pugh. During his three years' service he was with the army of the Tennessee in all its campaigns in the west, at the siege and final surrender of Vicksburg, with Sherman at Atlanta, in the march to the sea, and the final march through the Carolinas and Virginia to Washington. Since the war Dr. Coleman has uninterruptedly practiced his profession in Monticello, and is one of our most able and worthy physicians. He owns one of the neatest homesteads of the city, and one needs but to glance at his yard in the summer time to observe that he has taste and ability in landscape gardening.

MR. WILSON F. COX, Nashville, Missouri, was born February 28, 1827, in Spencer county, Indiana, and removed with his parents to Vermilion county, Indiana, in 1831. He attended subscription school most of the time from 1833 to 1836, after which his school days were restricted to from six to ten weeks per annum. By devoting most of his spare time to study he was enabled, at the age of nineteen, to obtain the position of teacher in a neighboring country school. In November, 1849, he mounted his horse and, with his earthly possessions made into a small bundle, he set his face westward, and on the 7th arrived at "Greasy Point," four miles southwest of Mahomet, and near the line between Piatt and Champaign counties. From 1850 to 1857 he divided his time between teaching and farming. He was united in marriage with Mrs. Jane Smith nee Willard, on the 23d of September, 1851. In July, 1857, he removed with his family to Monticello, where he was successively engaged as deputy recorder in the office of L. J. Bond; circuit clerk; clerk in the store of J. H. Hollingsworth; deputy assessor, with Mr. Wm. F. Foster; deputy sheriff, with Dr. P. K. Hull until July, 1859, when he was chosen clerk of the county court to fill vacancy caused by the death of James L. Miller. In December, 1861, his term of office having expired, he enlisted in Co. Vol. Inf., being mustered in with the regiment April 10, 1862, as 2d sergeant; was made 1st sergeant in June, 1862; 2d lieutenant April 3, 1863, and was promoted to 1st lieutenant February, 1864. Cox in 1826. She died in Missouri, in August, 1872. Mrs. Wilson Cox, nee Jane Willard, was born near Nashville, Tennessee, January 19, 1825. Her parents both died during her childhood, and in 1834 relatives took her to Johnson county, Indiana, thence to Vermilion county, and thence, in 1840, to Piatt county, Illinois; at that time it was a part of Macon county. She was married in 1843, to Joshua Smith, and some years after his death was married to W. F. Cox.

WILSON F. COX, of Barton county, Missouri, in writing of his sojourn in Piatt county, remarked that "in 1849 the settlements were confined to the immediate vicinity of the timber on either side of the Sangamon river, very few of the farm houses being one-fourth of a mile from the timber line, and many people thought that the prairies would never be settled as far out as three or four miles. The first man I heard speak of settling at the Irish Grove, now the 'Uncle Tommy Branch farm,' was deemed a proper subject for the lunatic asylum, and doubtless any man who would have attempted to settle east of the Blue Mound would have been deemed an incurable idiot. Yet ere I left Piatt county farms and farm-houses dotted the broad prairie east and west of the Sangamon river, to and far beyond Tolono on the east, and to Friends creek on the west." He further says that since the close of the war a number of Piatt county citizens have removed to southwest Missouri. Among them are Charles Marquiss, of Joplin, Jasper county, Missouri; John Elsea, Joseph Wright and Samuel Franklin, at Webb City, Jasper county, Missouri; M. P. Winstead, John Dyer, Henry Morain, John S. Herron and H. D. Moffitt, Nashville, Barton county, Missouri; Braxton Acree and William Robinson, at Golden City, Barton county, Missouri; Harry Hubbart, J. Plunk, at Nashville, Barton county, Missouri; Frank Gulick, Preston, Jasper county; Elijah Souders, Avilla, Jasper county; Benjamin Bartlett, J. Collins, John Wolf and Mrs. William Sides (née Elizabeth Coffman, daughter of Noah Coffman), at Diamond City, Missouri; William M. Collins, at Preston, Jasper county; and William S. It was during this time he first saw his future wife. After doing a good deal of sawing for various persons in the neighborhood Mr. Devore and his brother-in-law walked and dragged their whip-saw to Chicago. After a spell of sickness in the early fall he returned to Piatt county, and in December, 1835, married Susan Barnes. The newly married couple moved on to a farm nine miles southwest of Monticello. Sickness soon compelled them to return to Mr. Barnes', where they remained a year. As soon as Mr. Devore was able to be about, and while using crutches, he helped to put up a house which was the original "Old Fort" in Monticello. Before the house was completed he rented it to Mr. Edward Ater and Judge Ricketts, who were to plaster the house for the use of it. Devore, while in Chicago, became acquainted with many of the early settlers there. He knew Guerdon S. Hubbard and the Kinzies there. Mrs. Devore married Mr. John Woolington. (See account of John Woolington.)

MR. ANDREW J. DIGHTON (deceased) was born in Erie City, Pennsylvania, and moved to Ashtabula county, Ohio. He was one of a family of ten children, and was educated at Kingsville and Transylvania University. Going to Kentucky, he taught school and attended law school there. Though he was admitted to the bar, he never practiced. He started to work for himself when fourteen or fifteen years old with but $1.50. By careful industry he was enabled to purchase land, and, in partnership with Mr. Donaldson, bought a farm of John Suver in this county, locating here in 1853, at first living in a double hewed log house. Because of two spare beds, a rag carpet, big pillows, flowered window curtains, and chairs, it was considered the finest furnished house in all the neighborhood. He soon bought Mr. Donaldson out, his farm then consisting of 800 acres. They at first lived not far from where the present house now stands. At the time of his death he owned 1,520 acres of land, part of which is in Champaign county, besides a home of 500 acres; also had one-third interest in the bank of Houston, Moore & Dighton. The home farm was the best improved of any, the nice farm residence being built soon after coming to the county, but it has since been remodeled. He also owned a farm of 197 acres at Cisco, which is some improved. Mr. Dighton was married in Kentucky, in 1854, to Sarah C. Netherton. They have had eight children, five of whom are living. Ida died December 30, 1881, twelve years old. Willie and Mary are twins. Mrs. Dighton was one of a family of eight children, three of whom lived on farms. They were formerly slave owners. Mr. Dighton's parents were of English descent. His father was born in New York state, held the position of county judge and was in the war of 1812. His grandfather was in the revolutionary war under Burgoyne. Before leaving England he determined not to fight the Americans but to desert to their side. At this time he was in college preparing for the church, and was a good Greek and Latin scholar. He deserted while in Canada and went through woods to the American side; was followed by Indians, and so closely beset that he threw away his arms and sunk himself all but his nose under a log in the water. The Indians actually walked over the log and their dog came and smelled of him. He was so exhausted and about to give up when he heard a rooster crow and crawled to the house and finally got to the army. He received several wounds during engagements, was given an office, and at the time of Burgoyne's surrender was on the American side. After leaving the army he taught school the rest of his life. Grandfather Dighton lived here seven years, died about 1867, and is buried in Piatt county. Mr. Andrew Dighton died December 25, 1878.

As they came into Monticello the next day after arriving in the county Mrs. Dyer caught sight of the old Methodist church, and thought it was a bake-shop. They first settled in a portion of the house in which the Misses Huston now live. Mr. Dyer paid $20 in gold a month for rent, and the building was only one story. Every room but one in the house leaked. Mr. Dyer has been a carpenter all his life. Both Mr. and Mrs. Dyer have been zealous workers in the Methodist Episcopal church of Monticello.

This building burned down, and the grocery was then opened on the southeast side of the square. In September, 1881, Mr. Dickerson moved into the brick store building lately built by Mr. J. N. Dighton on the southwest side of the square. During the last six months of service he was detailed as clerk at the headquarters at Galveston post. We chanced to see his discharge, and we were pleased to note that the lieutenant-colonel in charge of the post said some very good things about him. Upon our asking Mr. Dickerson to relate some of his narrow escapes in the army, he spoke of being detailed to take orders to the ambulance corps in the rear. While standing by a wagon talking to the wagon master, a solid shell, sixty pounds weight, struck and killed three mules which stood at his side. After recovering sufficiently from the shock, he, with several men, dug the ball from the ground where it struck twenty feet from the mules.

After six months' residence in this county they moved to Stringtown Lane, Piatt county. At one time Mr. Garver owned 140 acres of land on this lane, 80 acres on Goose creek, 160 acres near Farmer City, besides some timber land. He sold his land, and, after a residence of about eleven years on the lane, moved to Monticello, where he still resides. Mr. and Mrs. Garver had very few neighbors when they first moved into this county. There were no houses west of them for five or six miles. The nearest school-house stood across the road from where Mr. Henry Woolington until lately has lived. This school-house was afterward moved on to the lane to the site of the present school-house. The deer were not yet extinct in this county when the Garvers settled here. They had a pet deer, which became very tame, and of which they grew quite fond. MR. J. T. GRAY has taken the pains to furnish to us, in writing, an interesting account of his life, and we place the substance of the entire sketch before our readers: "I was born December 14, 1819, in Sussex county, Delaware. My grandfather, Isaac Gray, was of the Anglo-Saxon race and came to America previous to the revolutionary war. My mother's father was of Irish descent. He came to America previous to the revolutionary war and was a private in that war under Gen. Marion. My father was born on the eastern shore of Maryland, about 1782. He was a sailor up to the time of his marriage and made one trip afterward. He married Miss Margaret Magee, who was the daughter of Samuel Magee, and who was born in Sussex county, Delaware, about the year 1787. My father died February 28, 1836, leaving six children, the two eldest, Jacob and Sarah, being married. The following fall we emigrated to Pickaway county, Ohio. We started September 27, 1836, and came to Baltimore by water. We crossed the mountains to Wheeling, Virginia, in a freight wagon and from there were conveyed in a wagon to Zanesville. Here we stopped for about two months, nearly all of the family having a spell of sickness, and I came near dying. After Christmas we hired a farmer to take us to Circleville, Ohio, and January 12, 1837, reached the home of Mr. James T. Magee, my mother's brother, about twelve miles west of Circleville. I was married at his house, April 4, 1838, to his daughter Jane, my first cousin. In the fall of 1856 we started for Illinois. My youngest brother, John, started with me. We left Pickaway county October 29. Had some bad weather, which made the roads miserable. On one occasion, when traveling on a plank road in Indiana, for which we had to pay heavy toll, one of the wheels slipped into a hole made by one of the boards moving aside and the coupling pole broke. Although the forward end of the wagon went down, providentially nobody was hurt. We were delayed over one day in getting the wagon fixed. I found the president of the road and claimed damages, but he would do nothing. I threatened to sue the company, but he kindly told me that although he thought I could recover damages, that I could not wait for a lawsuit, and the best thing I could do was to mend the wagon and go on. I took his kind advice. On another occasion we got anxious to reach our journey's end and concluded to drive awhile after night. Accordingly, after feeding our horses and cooking and eating our supper out in the woods, we hitched up and drove five or six miles, when we came to a bridge. We found boards up across the road in front of the bridge and we concluded there was danger ahead. After looking around and going back a short distance we found a muddy road which, at an angle of about forty-five degrees, led down into the river. I unhitched one horse and found where the going out place was on the other side. After riding across the river several times, in order to find the best road, we started the wagon across. The road out of the river on the west bank was very steep and had a short turn in it. I knew if the horses faltered the least bit, or if anything broke about the wagon, that the wagon could not escape turning over into the river. I think it was the most dangerous event I ever passed through, and it almost makes my head swim yet when I think of it. But we got through all right, and the next morning, after feeding our horses and getting breakfast, we reached the prairie—the almost boundless prairie. The effect it produced on me seems indescribable. The morning was slightly foggy, and looking before me I could see no timber and the prairie brought to my mind the boundless ocean. When the sun was about an hour high the fog cleared away and before me was spread a view that would certainly be appreciated by one who had always lived in a wooded country. I can still look with delight upon the wild prairie. When we passed through Bement I counted the houses and there were fifteen, all told. We stopped about seven miles northeast of Decatur. The weather was getting cold and I was almost out of money, so I went to work husking corn, but I soon found that I could not do that. Not long after I heard a man complaining that his clock had stopped. I told him that I could fix it. As he seemed anxious to have it done I went home with him. While I was fixing the clock Mr. Jacob Garner, a neighbor, came in and watched me until I was done. He then told me that I could make good wages and have lots of such work to do if I would go around and look for it. Accordingly I started and traveled until February 15, 1857, on which day I got to Monticello, and I have been here ever since. I worked through the winter, generally going home every Saturday. I did very well financially, making from $10 to $15 per week, but it was a very cold winter and I often suffered intensely with the cold. In the month of March I moved my family here. There were three or four families living in the fort. I went to work repairing clocks and watches, and have followed that business more or less ever since. In the spring of 1859 I connected with it the making of ambrotypes, and I have the honor of being the first resident artist of Monticello. A Mr. Butler, of Decatur, and Mr. Cathcart both worked here for awhile, and, too, there was a car here for a time. I made the first photograph that was ever made in the county, in the spring of 1862.

I followed the business until four years ago, when I found my eyes were getting too old for photography. We have five children living. Salathiel, a soldier of the war, in the 49th Ill. reg., married Sarah Magee; Sarah Margaret married David Garver and lives in Macon county; William W. married Sydney McDivett, has two children, and lives in Monticello; James married Melissa Gifford and has two children; John married Hattie Cole." Mr. Gray has twenty-three grandchildren. He served a part of a term as justice of the peace.

MR. THEODORE GROSS is a native of Germany, and came to America in 1856, locating near Atwood. He lived there, where he still owns property, until he was elected to his present office, county treasurer, in 1879. He married Julia Zuber, a native of Germany, in 1868, and has five children living: Hedwig, Theodore, Ella, Albert and Julia. Mr. Gross went into the army as a private in 1861, in Co. A, 21st Ill. Inf., and remained four years, participating in the battles of Stone River and Chickamanga, at which place he was taken prisoner. He spent nineteen months in Libby and several other rebel prisons ere he made his escape. He went out as private and returned as second lieutenant.

MR. JAMES HART left Kentucky, his native state, when he was eleven or twelve years old. He remained in Indiana until he was grown and then came to Illinois. He did not like the state, and returned to Indiana. His granddaughter says, "he then found grandma and thought he could stand it out here." He married Miss Rebecca Bradford, a native of North Carolina, August 15, 1830. He moved to Green county, Illinois, in 1831, and in 1836 settled in Piatt county. They lived for a time in the same house with William H. Piatt and wife, who were then living on what is now the Piatt county fair grounds. In 1839 they moved onto the present homestead place. Mr. Hart's grandfathers were both in the revolutionary war, and he, with two brothers, was in the Black Hawk war. One brother died in the rebellion. Three of Mr. Hart's children died when quite young. Ann Eliza married Mr. William H. Harris, and their home was about two miles from Mr. Hart's. She died, leaving four children, Henry Payne, Rebecca J., Sally A. and James William. Mr. Harris married again, but died in 1869, leaving another son. His widow is now the wife of Mr. William Branch. Marietta Hart married Samuel Smock and lives in Monticello township. Martha J. married Mr. C. H. Plaster and has three children, Annetta, Emily and James Edwin. Since taking the notes for Mr. Hart's personal sketch, he, after a lingering illness, died. He was considered an excellent farmer and an upright, honest man in all his dealings.

MR. JACOB HOTT (deceased) was married in Pickaway county, Ohio, to Miss Margaret Fisher. Her father moved to Piatt county and bought land of Mr. Abraham Marquiss. Probably it was through the influence of his father-in-law that Jacob Hott came to this county. He left Ohio soon after his marriage, and about 1838 or 1839 settled on what was then known as Dr. Hull's farm. He afterward moved onto his father-in-law's place and remained there till his death in 1856. He left seven children, three of whom are now living. Mary married John Hughes; she died, leaving one daughter, Emma, who is still living. Hiram Hott died in the army. Henry Hott was married in 1864, to Catharine A. Garver. They have five children living, Lucy, Mary, John, Media and Ida. Mr. Hott went into the merchandise business with Mr. Hazzard in 1870. They occupied a building on the west side of the public square in Monticello till 1875, when they moved to their present location on the east side of the square. Previous to going into merchandise Mr. Hott had been a farmer. Harriett married Mr. R. Williams. She died about 1872, leaving one child, Perry. Mr. Williams married again. Martha married Mr. Eli Ater, a farmer living in Willow Branch township. They have had three children, Edward, Charles and Jesse. A sad accident happened to John, the youngest son of this family. The people of Monticello were celebrating the Fourth of July, 1866, by firing off a canon which stood on Bender's corner. The canon seemed overloaded, and this boy, fifteen years of age, fearing that it would burst, retired to where Mr. Zyble's shoe store now is. His fears were more than realized; the canon did burst, and a piece of it, striking the boy, quenched the spark of his young life in fifteen hours after. Elizabeth is still single and is living with her mother, who is now the wife of Mr. Solomon Ater.

DR. P. K. HULL was born about 1810, in what is now Highland county, Virginia. His parents were also from Virginia. Dr. Hull moved to Circleville, Ohio, when he was about twenty-four years of age. He studied medicine in Jefferson College, Philadelphia. After practicing medicine in Ohio for a time he moved west. He married Mary J. Huston, March 31, 1839. Three children reached maturity. Renick Huston, who married Rebecca Williams, was frozen to death on the prairies near Goose Creek. Estelle became the wife of Mr. Frank Williams, and lived for a number of years at Monticello. She was a successful music teacher of the place. Mr. and Mrs. Williams have four children. They have recently sold their farm near Monticello and have moved to Kansas. Mary is the wife of Renick Buckles, of Champaign, and has three children. Monticello was her home also for several years. Dr. Hull moved to Monticello late in the fall of 1841. He made his home for a time on what is now a part of the Allerton farm. His wife died in 1849, and he rented out his farm and returned with his children. About 1855 the doctor returned to Monticello. He bought the property now owned by Lettie Huston, and died at this home November 20, 1859. During a scourge of cholera in 1852 and 1853, in Ohio, Dr. Hull was very successful. He was one of the first physicians in Piatt county, and was regarded by the early settlers almost as an oracle in matters of disease. One who was intimately associated with him says he was a man of big heart and noble impulses, and was generous to the extreme. Widows and orphans never claimed his attention without getting it. Dr. Hull was one of the charter members of the Masonic lodge of Monticello, and upon his death, in 1860, was buried by the Masonic orders.

MR. WM. HUNTER is a native of Ireland. His father was born in Ireland in 1796. His mother was a native of Scotland. Of Mr. and Mrs. Hunter's five children, who were born in Ireland, William, born January 25, 1836, was the youngest. He was but a babe when the family emigrated to America. They settled in Ohio, and in this state both of William's parents died. Two of his sisters also died in Ohio, the other two went to Iowa in 1853 and settled there. One of these sisters was born in Ohio. William's only brother went west some years ago and his whereabouts is not known. Mr. Wm. Hunter came from Pickaway county, Ohio, to Piatt county in 1857, and was acquainted with quite a number of people who had emigrated from Ohio to this county. He first worked for Dr. Hull, with whom he was acquainted in Ohio. In 1859 he began working for Wm. H. Piatt. He went back to Ohio and was married January 1, 1861, to Minerva A. Trego, who was born about 1840. After their marriage Mr. and Mrs. Hunter came to W. H. Piatt's, and remained there until September of 1861, when they moved onto a farm of W. H. Piatt's. They remained on this place until 1875, when they moved onto a farm of their own. In 1881 Mr. Hunter sold his farm to Mr. Parr and bought property in Monticello. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter have had four children: Emma Francis, born October 7, 1861; James, born July 20, 1863; Nellie, born March 14, 1865, and Wm. P., born September 26, 1868. Their eldest daughter, Emma, was married in 1880, to Geo. Miller ; she died in the spring of 1881, leaving one child.

The HARRIS brothers were quite influential men in this county a number of years ago. They were all farmers and did an extensive stock business in the county. Mr. Payne Harris, now of Champaign, was the eldest of the brothers. B. F. Harris, now a prominent banker of Champaign, first came to Piatt county in 1835, and on the 22d of June of that year entered eighty acres of land in the county. For ten years he dealt extensively in stock. He bought stock in the fall and fed through the winter, thus for ten years furnishing stock and grain markets for the farmers of this county. One year he fed 900 head of cattle near Monticello. He drove his cattle to the eastern states for marketing. In 1844 one drove was sent to Boston and brought $56 per head. The last drove, which was taken by Wm. Marquiss to Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, consisted of 430 cattle, which cost $14 per head and were sold for $28 per head. Mr. Harris certainly had a great deal to do with helping the farmers of Piatt county along. He is still a farmer as well as a banker, and owns at least 5,000 acres of land. Mr. Charles Harris and Mr. John Harris died in this county. Wm. Harris died near Cañon City, Colorado.

MR. ABRAHAM HENNION, formerly of Monticello, moved from New Jersey to Piatt county in 1852, and began improvements on a farm of 160 acres south of Monticello. After remaining here several years he moved back to New Jersey, but still has some 330 acres of land in Piatt county. He was married in 1851, to Mary A. Wintermute, a native of New Jersey, and has three children: Gilford, who is married and lives in New Jersey, Foster and Ida.

MR. JAMES HOLMES, a former editor in Monticello, is a native of Pickaway county, Ohio. He is of English descent, and was left an orphan when but six years old. He made his home with an aunt, Dr. B. B. Jone's mother, until ten years of age. He came to Piatt county in 1859, and, after farming one season, was engaged in the printing business until the war broke out. He went to the army in 1862, in Co. E of the 107th Inf., and remained throughout the war. He enlisted as a private and came out as 1st lieutenant. The principal battles in which he took part were Knoxville, Resaca, Nashville, Franklin and siege of Atlanta. He was never wounded or taken prisoner. Mr. Holmes married Mary E. Ward, December 21, 1865. They have three children, Nannie, Ward and Paul. Mr. Holmes began publishing a paper in Monticello in 1865, and has been occupied in this business the most of his time since, until quite recently, when he moved to Chicago.

In 1853 Mr. Hill came to Piatt county, in the employ of Messrs. A. N. & W. H. Cochran, cattle traders, in Ohio. Soon after coming to this county he was employed in Mr. Ralph Tenney's store. In 1855 he was employed by Piatt & Co., and has worked in the same store under different firms most of the time since. Mr. Hill was married in May 1862, to Lucia A. Piper. They have four children, Emma, Richard J., Charles W. and Louis, all of whom are at home. Mr. Hill was secretary in the Masonic lodge for six or seven years. He is a member of the blue lodge, and of the commandery of Knight Templar.

MISS LETTIE HUSTON, Aunt Lettie, as she is known to all Monticello folks, is a native of Pickaway county, Ohio, from which state she moved to Monticello at the time Dr. Hull settled here, in 1841. After a residence of five years she returned to Ohio, but came back to Piatt county in 1859, and has made this county her home more or less ever since. She taught in the Monticello schools for seven consecutive years, and has long been a prominent member of the Methodist Episcopal church of this place. She owns quite a good deal of town property.

MR. HARVEY E. HUSTON, lawyer, Monticello, is a native of Pickaway county, Ohio, from which place his people moved about 1859, to Jackson county, Missouri. At this date the subject of our sketch was about fifteen years old. He remembers very distinctly the breaking out of the war, and the effect it had upon the people of Jackson county. The vast majority of the people in that county were rebels. It was there that Quantrel's band of guerrillas was organized, and Mr. Huston knew many of the boys who joined the organization. Jesse James, whose recent murder has caused so much excitement, was a member of this band. When it "got too hot" for them in Jackson county, Mr. Huston's people moved, in 1862, to Douglas county, Kansas, near Lawrence. They remained at this place until within two or three months of the massacre, in 1863, of the citizens of Lawrence. Mr. Huston was acquainted with many of these citizens. After relating some of the war scenes he had witnessed, Mr. Huston remarked that though he was not in the war, he had seen enough of the horrors of it. In 1863 his family moved back to Will county, Illinois, near Joliet, where they lived four years, and then moved to Logansport, Indiana. On the 1st of January, 1868, Mr. Huston "jolted across the prairie from Bement to Monticello in Billy Motherspaw's old hack," and he has been in Piatt county ever since. He taught school for two years at Wild-Cat, while studying law under the direction of Mr. Chas. Watts, of Monticello. In March, 1870, he was admitted to the bar, and very soon after went into partnership with W. E. Lodge, and has been with him ever since. When asked if he had held any offices in the county he very soberly remarked, "I ran for county judge once and did not get elected, because I did not get votes enough." Mr. Huston was married December 29, 1870, to Miss Susie Stickel, who died January 21, 1872, leaving a little daughter, Susie, who died in August of the same year. He was married the second time on March 7, 1876, and to Miss Martha Ward. One son, Ward T., has blessed this union. Mr. Huston's father, Mr. Thomas Huston, who died in Monticello about 1878, was drafted in the war of 1812. He hired a substitute, who was killed ere the war ended. He was a prominent citizen of Ohio, having served in the state legislature about 1840.

MR. JOHN HAYS, a farmer in Monticello township, was born in Ireland in 1830. He left Ireland and landed in New York in 1851. In speaking of this fact Mr. Hays very dryly remarked, "I ought to have left there twenty years before." There was small-pox on board the ship which brought him to America, but Mr. Hays escaped its clutches. He was raised a farmer, and, in coming to this country, thought to find a better opening for farmers than the old country afforded. Mr. Hays has owned land in several townships in this county. He landed here first in 1859, after a three years' residence in Macon county. He was married in New York, to Miss Anna Ryan, a native of Ireland. They have had five children, three of whom, Nanno, James and Will, are living. Mr. Hays was school director for eight years, and during this time was instrumental in the building of the school-house which is now at Hammond. He is a member of the Catholic church.

MR. E. W. LUMSDEN, hardware merchant, Monticello, is a native of Morgan county, Illinois, to which county his father, who is still living, moved when there was nothing of Jacksonville except a few log houses. Mr. Lumsden moved to Champaign county, and from there to Piatt county in 1872, at which time he began the butchering business in Monticello. He went into the hardware business with Mr. Dove in 1879. At the present time he owns a house and two lots in Monticello. He was married in 1864, to Pathaney Ayre, and has five children, Walter, Jonas A., James, Anna and Olive E.

MR. D. O. LOY, Monticello, is a native of Ohio, from which state he came to Illinois and located in Piatt county in 1865. He began manufacturing tile in 1878, and started the first steam tile works in the county, and at present has the largest steam works in the county. He is just completing a brick building, 20×30 feet, and two stories in height, in which he expects to carry on his manufactures during the winter season. Several years ago Mr. Loy obtained a patent for well brick and paving brick which he invented. We anticipate that at some day he may realize something from his patent.

DR. LEVI M. LEE was born in Edmundson county, Kentucky, and was educated at Cloverport, in the same state. He removed to Louisville, Kentucky, in 1859, and in 1861 joined the 10th reg. of the Ky. Vol. Inf., remaining as quartermaster clerk during over three years of service in the war. After leaving the army he began the study of medicine, and graduated at the Medical University of Louisville, Kentucky, March 1, 1870, and has been in constant practice since. Dr. Lee joined the Methodist Episcopal church in 1876, belongs to the Pioneer Lodge, No. 8, Knights of Pythias, Louisville, Kentucky, and is a member of the I.O.O.F. Lodge of Monticello. He was united in marriage June 18, 1874, to Miss S. B. Suver. Both of his parents are living in Indianapolis.

MR. BENJAMIN MARKEL (deceased) was a native of Pennsylvania, from which state he moved to Ohio. He came to Illinois in December, 1846, and the following spring located as a carpenter in Monticello. He followed his trade until his health failed. A number of houses now in Monticello were built by him. He was married in March, 1832, to Eliza Luginbeel, a native of Frederick county, Maryland. Three of their ten children are now living. Kate married Mr. John Lincoln, and has one son, Otis. She has been a successful mantua-maker in Monticello for twenty-one years. Sarah was the wife of Henry Woolington. Her death occurred in 1866. Oliver Markel married Melissa Russel, who died in 1879, leaving two children, Orville and Earnest. Miss Ella has followed the dressmaking business for a number of years. Mr. Markel died in 1868.

MR. THOMAS MOFFITT (deceased) was born in Pennsylvania. He was of Irish and Scotch descent, and his mother was a daughter of Col. Patterson, of Brownville, Pennsylvania. He moved from Pittsburg to Piatt county about 1857, and lived here until he moved to Kansas. He moved his family to Cañon City, Colorado, but he died in Cherryvale, Kansas. He had nine children, who lived to be grown. Eliza married Dr. Bradbury and lives in Cañon, Colorado. Matilda married Jerry Bender, but died leaving two children, Charles and Anna. Thomas N. married Ophelia J. White, of Columbus, Ohio, and lives in Galesville. They have had two children, only one of whom, Blanche, is living. We cannot refrain from making mention of T. N. Moffitt's talent in art. In fact he is a natural artist, and we can but hope that he will educate himself in this direction, for we feel sure that success would await him. Of late years in this country there is such a demand for designers, wood engravers and artists that an opening certainly awaits him. Edward Moffitt is in Ketchum, Idaho. Elvira, the wife of Prof. Morgan, has two children and lives in Kansas. Henrietta, who married Louis Combs, died, leaving one child.

Grantley married Maggie Mitchell, and is in the Black Hills. Belle, the wife of Wm. Gordon, has one child and lives in Colorado. When Mr. Thomas Moffitt was in Monticello, he was a bridge carpenter. He superintended the building of the levee out from Monticello to the river bridge. After going to Kansas, he was a minister in the Methodist Episcopal church.

MR. JAMES McMILLEN, of Monticello, is of Scotch lineage, and a native of Highland county, Ohio. His parents lived and died in the same county. His father was under Gen. Harrison in the war of 1812. His brother, Thomas, came with him to Piatt county about 1854. They had lived previously, however, a number of years, near Logansport, Indiana. After farming for Mr. Ezra Marquiss for four years, Mr. McMillen moved into Monticello, where he has lived ever since. He was married in Highland county, in 1835, to Miss Maggie Huston, a sister of Mr. John Huston, who preached in the county a number of years. They have six children. John C. E. married Flora Langdon, and lives in Monticello, and has five children. He was in thirteen battles of the late war, but was neither wounded or taken prisoner. Susan E. is the wife of Mathew Jacobs, a farmer of Champaign county, and has two children. A. H. McMillen and Lizzie Foster were married in 1877. They have two children, and are now living in Iowa. Sarah J. became the wife of John LeFever in 1876, has two children, and lives in Macon county. Alice McMillen has been working in "The Herald" printing office in Monticello for several years. Emma S. is living with an aunt in Ohio.

MR. JOSEPH MALLORY, a resident of Monticello, was born May 23, 1816, near the Antietam battle-field. His parents were raised in Virginia, his father in Stafford county and his mother in Jefferson county. His father was of English and Irish, while his mother was of French and German descent. After their marriage they made their home in Jefferson county, spending some of their summers, however, in Washington county, Maryland. His father was in the United States service; was inspector of arms, and lived at Harper's Ferry. Mr. Joseph Mallory says that his father was the first man Gen. Harrison appointed to office after his inauguration, and that it was Daniel Webster who recommended him to the position of superintendent of Jefferson barracks. Mr. Mallory's grandfather on his father's side was on the ordnance corps, and was under the immediate command of Gen. Washington in the revolution. His grandfather on his mother's side was with Gen. St. Clair. Mr. Mallory moved from Virginia to Pickaway county, Ohio, in 1828. A portion of the family moved to Piatt county in 1835, while the rest came in 1837. Mr. Joseph Mallory was of the first party. The family settled upon the Sangamon river about eleven miles from Monticello. The father, Mr. George Mallory, who was born in 1778, died on this place in 1841. The mother lived to the age of eighty-six years, and died in 1857 in Nebraska. Mr. Joseph Mallory was married January 1, 1856, to Mrs. J. P. Smith, nee Cassandria F. Longnecker, a native of Montgomery county, Kentucky. Her father and mother were natives of Kentucky; the one was of German and English descent, the other of French descent. She was married first in 1848. Mr. Smith died in 1852. One daughter, Helen, born the same year her father died, is now the wife of Richard Stickel, of Monticello. Mrs. Smith moved to this county in 1849. Mr. and Mrs. Mallory have but one daughter, Lizzie. Upon our speaking to this young lady of her birthplace, she remarked, "I was born and raised here, and I suppose I will die here—if I have good luck." In speaking of his early days in this county, Mr. Mallory remarked that the first deer he ever killed was in 1835. Mr. Mallory thinks he, in 1840, took the first drove of cattle that was ever taken from Piatt county to New York city. While in the city during this trip he did quite a bold thing for a "green Illinois drover" to do. In those days it was the custom for drovers to wait some fifteen or twenty days for the butchers to pay for their stock. While waiting for his money Mr. Mallory became acquainted with quite a strong whig, who happened to mention that Daniel Webster was at the Astor House. Now it had long been Mr. Mallory's great desire to see the great orator, and he immediately resolved to go to this house and see if he could get a glimpse of the man. When he reached the hotel, and as he, probably in a very "green and awkward manner," began to gaze about him, he was accosted by an individual who wished to know what was wanted. Upon learning his desire and his name, the gentleman said: "Come this way." Soon Mr. Mallory found himself standing in an open door, while within the room was a person whom the usher had just called "Mr. Webster." The frontiersman, who had been in many critical positions, suddenly found himself more thoroughly frightened than he had ever before been. His tongue cleaved to the roof of his mouth, and his intense pallor only disappeared at the good-naturedly, deep and kindly tones of Mr. Webster, who bade him come in. Mr. Mallory, in all frankness, acknowledged that it was only curiosity led him to intrude his presence, but Mr. Webster so thoroughly placed him at his ease that he soon felt it his duty to make known to him all his knowledge of the West and its people. Mr. Mallory was provost marshal of this county during the war. It is conceded by all that he performed his duty faithfully and well. This county had the credit of some 300 men more than was called for.

Mr. C. D. Moore, county surveyor, Monticello, is a native of Ohio. "Not from Pickaway," as he replied when interrogated, but claims Muskingum county as his birthplace. He moved from Ohio to Illinois in 1856, and came to Piatt county in 1858, locating in Bement, taught school one term, and then began surveying, which occupation he still pursues. He has laid out ten additions to Bement, seven to Monticello, and has laid out or assisted in laying out every town in the county. Mr. Moore was married in 1858, to Lonisa B. McMillen, of Ohio, who died in 1865, leaving two children, Otis and Mary Louisa, both graduates of Monticello High School. He was married again in 1867, to Emily Hubbell, a native of New York, who came to Illinois about 1864. They had one daughter, Una Cornelia, who died. Mr. Moore moved to Monticello in 1874. He has been town collector, commissioner of highway, and was the first supervisor from Bement township. He held the position of township treasurer of schools for fourteen years, and was county surveyor and drainage commissioner. He is a member of the Masonic lodge at Bement. Mr. Moore attended Martinsburg Academy, Knox county, Ohio, and had charge of this school at a later time.

Mr. WILLIAM McREYNOLDS (deceased) was born February 13, 1842, and was his father's second child. His father, Allen McReynolds, was born in Washington county, Virginia, in 1807. He moved to Tennessee, and from there to Missouri, soon after the state was admitted to the Union, and settled in Saline county. He was married January 15, 1840, to Miss M. A. Cooper, and they had thirteen children. The subject of our sketch was reared on the farm, and attended the public school of the neighborhood, until in his sixteenth year he was sent to college at Miami, where he remained two years. Upon returning home he was constable for a time in Saline county, and then, when the war broke out, came to Illinois to attend to the settlement of the estate of James McReynolds. He lived in Monticello a number of years, and then married. His wife was born in Tazewell county, Illinois. Her maiden name was Jennie Pendergast, and she was married in 1859, to Andrew Beard, who died June 17, 1861, and left one child, Frankie, who died in 1862. Mrs. Beard was married October 18.

1866, to Mr. William McReynolds, and moved to Monticello, where they lived until 1876, when they moved onto the farm one mile east of Monticello. Mr. McReynolds died May 13, 1879, leaving four children, Willie, John A., Logan Mary and Myra. Their twin girls, Bettie and Mattie, died. Mr. Beard, at the time of his death, was in the law office with Charles Watts, and had been for some time. Mr. McReynolds first worked in the county for William Piatt, and held the office of county surveyor, and was county judge for the second term at the time of his death.

MR. MARTIN MCINTOSH is of Scotch descent, and was born in Ohio. He moved from Ohio to Illinois in 1861, and to Piatt county in 1867. His father was a native of Ohio, and his mother of New Jersey. He was married in 1855, to Catharine J. Wilson, a native of Virginia. She is of German and of Irish descent, and her parents were natives of Virginia. Mr. and Mrs. McIntosh have had four children, three of whom are living. Their eldest son, William J., was married in 1881, to Mary Herrington. He lives at his father's, and is in partnership with him in the milling business. John W. and Martin I. are both at home. The original mill, which stood on the site where Mr. McIntosh's mill now stands, was the first mill built in the county, and was owned by a stock company. The company sold it to Mr. Zorger, who sold out to Mr. William Collins. Mr. Collins put up the main part of the mill now standing, and sold out to Mr. Emanuel Rhoades. Mr. McIntosh bought the mill of Mr. Rhoades. Mr. McIntosh grinds some 10,000 or 15,000 bushels a year. He is making preparations for more extensive work. A saw-mill has been connected with the flour mill for many years. During the last three years some 200,000 logs have been sawed. Probably more walnut logs have been used than any other kind. A new boiler has just (1881) been put into the mill. It is from the Decatur Novelty Works, and is twelve feet long, with a diameter of fifty-five inches, and has fifty-eight flues. Mr. McIntosh was township trustee for two terms. His father was in both the Black Hawk war and war of 1812. For his services he received two land warrants.

MR. DAVID McWILLIAMS, lawyer, Monticello, is a native of Ohio. His parents moved from Pennsylvania to Ohio at an early day, and on horseback, leading two pack-horses loaded with their housekeeping utensils. His father died in Ohio, but his mother followed her children to Illinois in 1853, where she died in 1879. The family settled in DeWitt and McLean counties. The subject of our sketch studied law in Springfield, where he was admitted to the bar on February 13, 1857. After practicing law in Taylorville, he went, in 1860, to Waynesville, from which place he came to Monticello. He was married in Clinton to Mrs. Vienna Roberts, and has had two children, one of whom, Vinnie B., is living.

MR. MARTIN McCUNE, farmer, is a native of Ohio. He moved from Wisconsin to Illinois in 1856, and from there to Piatt county in 1880. Mr. McCune was married in 1845, to Miss Mary E. Carl. They have had twelve children, all of whom are living. Sarah married Mr. John Richie, and is living in Macon county; John married Miss Haffman, and is living in Decatur; Jane married Mr. Bannon, and is living in Mason county; James, who married Sirena Dean, is living near Bement; Martin married Belle Whitnie, in Bement; Warren married Esther Boyer; George is unmarried; Mary is the wife of Henry Bassette, lives in Marion county, and is twin to Eliza, who is at home; Alice married Will Boyer, and lives near Bement. Frank and Samuel are at home. Mr. McCune was in the late war, enlisting from Macon county.

CAPT. MELVILLE H. MUSSER was born April 23, 1822, in Pickaway county, Ohio, and came to Monticello in 1857. Upon the breaking out of the war Mr. Musser went into Co. F of the 2d Ill. reg., served through the entire war with distinction, and was promoted several times. His death occurred February 22, 1868, after an illness of but thirty-six hours. His wife and three sons are still living. Charles is in Decatur, and Melville resides with his mother in Monticello. The following resolutions show the feeling that some of Mr. Musser's friends had upon his death:

WHEREAS, It has pleased an All-wise Ruler of the Universe to remove from among us Capt. M. H. Musser, our late comrade in arms; as a token of our regard and esteem for the deceased, be it Resolved, That the soldiers who participated in the funeral ceremonies of Capt. M. H. Musser, of Co. F, 2d Ill. V. C., extend our sympathies to his bereaved family.

Resolved, That in the person of Capt. Musser we have always found a friend in whom we could confide, a gentleman for whom we have always had the greatest regards, and a soldier who served the country in time of need.

G. F. MILLER, Pres.

C. P. DAVIS, Sec.

MR. H. V. MOORE, a prominent banker of Piatt county, is a native of Fulton county. From that place he went to Champaign, and thence came to Piatt county in November, 1870, and has since resided in Monticello. He owns two farms, 480 acres, in the county, and his residence in the north part of Monticello is one of the most commodious in the city. Mr. Moore was married in 1866, to Alzina W. Freeman, and has five children, Mary H., Allen F., Arthur F., Dwight L. and George M.

DR. JAMES MOFFITT, Monticello, was born in Ohio, in June, 1840, and came to Piatt county October 18, 1862. His youth was spent on a farm in Ohio, and his education was obtained in the public schools of Ohio and Illinois. He has been a farmer, a teacher, and for a number of years has been practicing medicine in Monticello, having obtained his medical education at the Rush Medical College, Chicago. He was united in marriage October 21, 1872, to Eleanor Piatt, a college graduate. They have three daughters, Jennie B., Marietta D. and Frances Willard. MR. A. F. MORRISON, Monticello, is a native of Pike county, Illinois, from which place he moved to DeWitt county in 1856, thence to Piatt county March 22, 1869, and has lived in the county most of the time since. He owns a residence and lot in Monticello. On October 1, 1865, Mr. Morrison and Margaret Shurtleff were united in marriage. Four of their six children are living, Emily E., Blanch, Sylvanus S. and Mabel F.

MR. JAMES H. MURPHY, of Monticello, Illinois, was born near Morgantown, county-seat of Burkes county, North Carolina, November 8, 1817. His father, Silas Murphy, was of Scottish descent, a master mechanic, and belonged to the Quaker church. His mother, Nancy (Greene) Murphy, was of English descent. James H. attended common school until fifteen years of age, when his parents moved to Indiana, in the year 1834; but they, not being satisfied with the climate, only remained two years, then moved to Canton, Illinois, in 1836. The subject of this sketch then attended school for a short time, after which he taught school two or three years, then served an apprenticeship for master mechanic, which, in connection with his occupation also, of lumber merchant and mill-owner, he followed for twenty-five years or more. In the year 1872, March 11, he concluded to change location, and came to Monticello, going into the lumber business, and also contracted for and built some of the finest buildings in the place. His family followed in May, 1872. He was married in September, 1846, to Elizabeth Scott, daughter of Dr. John Scott, a Baptist minister, and granddaughter of "Grandfather" Parker, the celebrated Baptist minister of Washington, D. C., also granddaughter of Hosea Ballou, the widely-known Universalist minister, and is the father of five children, three boys and two girls. The two girls and one boy are still living. One daughter is married, the other is a successful music teacher, and the son, a No. 1 job printer, is foreman of the "Piatt County Herald." He joined the Methodist Episcopal church at Canton when he was about twenty years of age, and has been connected with the same denomination ever since. He has also been connected with several other societies, secret and otherwise. His wife also has been a member of the same denomination for many years. He has held numerous offices of public trust in Canton, Illinois, and in Monticello, Illinois.

MR. EBENEZER MCGUFFEY, a farmer in Monticello township, is of German and Irish descent, and was born in Indiana. He married Nancy A. Hanson, and in 1855 moved to Illinois. In 1861 they moved from the southern part of Illinois to Piatt county. They have had nine children, four of whom are living. John F. makes his home with his parents. Martha E. married Benjamin Duvall, and has one child, Henry. Sylvester and Mary are both living at home. Mr. McGuffey owns about 50 acres of land.

MR. SMITH MULFORD, blacksmith, Monticello, is a native of New Jersey, from which state he moved to Illinois and located in Piatt county in 1856. He began his trade in Monticello at that time, and has been following it ever since. He is a member of the Masonic lodge of said place. In 1860 Mr. Mulford and Julia Hennon, of New Jersey, were united in marriage. They have had five children, Flora, Marcus, Almeda, Rodney and Jesse.

MRS. SAMUEL MINEAR, a native of Ohio, came to Piatt county about 1865. There are about 160 acres in the home place. Mr. Minear died in Ohio. Six of Mrs. Minear's children are living. Sarah and Penelope, the wives of Trenck and Will M. Piatt, respectively; Anzaletta, a teacher of the county, who graduated in 1880 at the Wesleyan University; Samuel, who lives at home, and Sherman and John Clark.

MR. A. M. MCKINNEY, of Achilles, Rawlins county, Kansas, writes that he has never seen a county of richer lands or better adapted to agricultural pursuits than Piatt county. When he began house-keeping, in a small frame house, where the brick store building occupied by W. E. Smith now stands, Monticello was then a village of 300 or 400 inhabitants. Decatur was the nearest village, and of less enterprise than Monticello. Springfield was the nearest town where a cook stove and set of chairs or bedstead could be purchased. There were two stores of general merchandise in Monticello, Joseph Kee's and Daniel Stickel's. James Hollingsworth kept some groceries, J. C. Johnson and John Tenbrooke were hotel proprietors. Dr Ward had a practice extending some twenty-five or thirty miles around. There was a church organization, but only occasional preaching. Daniel Stickel was superintendent of the Sunday-school, which was held in the court-house. The literary society was the chief entertainment, and prominent among its leaders were Jacob and Noah Piatt. That was a memorable winter in the history of Monticello and Piatt county. When the heavy winter snows began to melt, the river mills were so damaged by the surplus water that all milling had to be done at the Springfield steam mills. Mr. McKinney also mentions the suffering caused by a traveler who stopped at Tenbrooke's hotel, and brought small-pox into the county. The first death was that of Mrs. Bailey's little girl at the hotel, and there were but few families that entirely escaped the disease. Death and mourning were in almost every house, and there was much suffering from want of care. Two young men, the Crane boys, would surely have died for want of care, had not George Young, of Friends Creek, offered to nurse them without charge. It was a terrible winter, and will not soon be forgotten by those who lived there.

WM. NOECKER, M.D., the parents of Dr. Noecker, were of German descent and natives of Pennsylvania, and at the time of their death were living in Northumberland county, of that state. His father enlisted in the war of 1812. Dr. Noecker was born in Northumberland county, Pennsylvania, in 1825. In January, 1840, he went to Ohio, and afterward studied medicine at Circleville in that state, under the supervision of Dr. Hull, who was then residing in that place. After graduating at the Starling Medical College in Columbus, Ohio, Dr. Noecker came west, and in March, 1853, located at Monticello, Illinois. A great many people having already emigrated to Piatt county from Pickaway county, Ohio, the doctor found himself quite among friends. Soon after his arrival here he went into partnership with Dr. Ward, who for some little time had been the only physician in the place. Their partnership lasted one year, during which time they carried on a practice which extended not only throughout Piatt county, but also into portions of Champaign, Douglas and Macon counties. After their dissolution of partnership Dr. Noecker began to practice alone, and soon built up an extensive and lucrative practice from which he has amassed considerable wealth. In 1865 he went into the drug business, which from that time until now he has carried on in connection with his practice as a physician. Since 1868, when he built the corner brick building, a portion of which he now occupies, the doctor has turned his attention principally to the drug business. Dr. Noecker was married in December, 1861, to Miss Ella Britton. Little Willie, who died when but four years old, was their only child. In 1875 Dr. Noecker built one of the finest brick residences in Monticello. He and his wife, now in the prime of their life, are enjoying that greatest of all earthly blessings, a beautiful and happy home. Dr. Noecker has long belonged to the Masonic order in Monticello. For three years he held the office of high priest, and at the present time he is recognized as past high priest of the Markwell chapter. He is also a charter member of the Urbana commandery of Knights Templar, and attended the Knight Templar encampment at New Orleans in 1874, and again at Cleveland in 1877. Dr. Noecker is recognized by his friends of Monticello and vicinity as a shrewd and successful business man.

MR. SAMUEL NEAL (deceased), farmer, was born in Maryland. He moved to Ohio, and about 1846 came to Illinois, and lived in and about Monticello until his death. He built a brick house on the ridge, where in 1851 he died. Mr. Neal was married in Ohio, to Margaret Painter, who died in 1870. They had twelve children, three of whom are now living, and are in Piatt county. Sarah is the wife of L. B. Weaver. Rachel married Chas. Van Gundy, who died, leaving two children; John, who married Susy Best, lives in Monticello township, and has three children; and Mattie, who is the wife of Wm. Porter, lives in Monticello, and has two children, Lula M. and Rachael E. Catharine married Jesse Bush. They have had five children, three of whom are living. Sarah, who married Mr. Fry, has one son, Harry. Samuel married Miss Ella O'Neal, and has one child, Eddie. Mr. J. Dee Bush is the name of the other son. Samuel Neal married Miss Cox, and lives in Monticello.

MR. P. T. NICHOLS, merchant, Monticello, was born in Maryland. When he was small, went to eastern Ohio, and came from there to Illinois. He came to Piatt county in 1872, immediately taking charge of the Monticello schools, and in all held such position for five years. He graded the school, and the high school was established in 1877, under his supervision. The first class to graduate, which consisted of five girls, went out during his principalship, and the north school building was erected while he held such position. In 1878 Mr. Nichols began merchandising, and is still in the same business. At the present time is a member of the school board. He was educated at Madison College, eastern Ohio, and is a graduate of a mercantile college.

MR. TIMOTHY O'CONNOR, farmer, Monticello, is a native of Ireland, who came to America in 1853, locating in Piatt county in 1876, having come to the state, however, in 1857. He owns 100 acres of land upon which he has put all the improvements save $500 worth. He has a good house, and the barn was built in 1881. Mr. O'Connor was married about 1871, to Jane Loughlyn, and they have two children, Dennie P. and Joseph. The family attend the Ivesdale Catholic church.

MR. CHARLES OSBORNE, a native of Jersey county, Illinois, came to Bement, Piatt county, in August, 1880, and moved to Monticello in December of the same year. He was married in 1874, to E. A. Gilman, and has one child, Louis M.

MR. A. T. PIPHER, Monticello, was born in Jefferson county, New York, in 1831, moved from New York in 1854, and came to this county in 1858. His parents were of French and English descent, were born in Rhode Island, and in 1854 moved from Jefferson county, New York, to Aurora, Kane county, Illinois, thence to Miama county, Kansas, in 1870. They both died in Kansas, his father in 1875 and mother in 1881. Immediately after Mr. Pipher came to this county, in 1858, he began practicing law and has been here ever since. He received his education in Black River Institute, Jefferson county, New York, and was a member of the class of 1854 in Hamilton College, Madison county, the same state. His health failed and he had to quit a few months before graduating. Mr. Pipher's license, issued January 6, 1858, admitting him to the bar, was signed by J. D. Caton and O. C. Skinner. Mr. Pipher was married in 1860, to Sophia K. Skinner, in Bloomington, who died in Lincoln, Nebraska. He has five children, Ella L., Albertina S., Florence M., Alonzo S. and Sophia M. Ella graduated from the Monticello high school in 1879 and Bertie in 1881. Mr. Pipher was again united in marriage, May 5, 1880, to Mrs. C. H. Mentz. He has lived where he now does since 1861. He formerly lived where Mr. Patterson did, which property is now owned by A. M. Piatt. Mr. Pipher was appointed Master in Chancery in 1868 and held the office for six years, was police magistrate for nearly five years and notary public about sixteen years of the time he has been here. Among his important law cases was People's case against Dick Turpin, (assumed name), James Erwin and John Riley, indicted for the murder of Sylvester H. Buckley, of Bement, about 1873. He was appointed by Judge Gallagher to defend Erwin, Turpin and Riley. The trial resulted in the acquittal of Erwin and Riley and the conviction of Turpin and his imprisonment in the penitentiary for fourteen years. Mr. Pipher was principal of Monticello schools two years in succession about 1861 and 1862, then served as principal another year in 1866 or 1867.

MR. ALEXANDER PERKINS, deceased, moved from Ohio, his native state, to Piatt county in 1856. Enticed by relatives living in the county, he had visited the place the year before moving. Mrs. Perkins, née Elizabeth Blacker, was born in Virginia, in 1817. When sixteen years old she moved to Ohio, in which state she was married. Her father was in the war of 1812. In about a year after coming from Ohio and settling in Goose Creek township, Mr. Perkins died. There were nine children in all, six of whom are living. Mrs. Perkins still survives her husband, and at present makes her home with her daughter, Mrs. White. The eldest son in Mr. Perkins' family, James L., was married in 1861, to Rebecca Bailey. He served three years in the late war. One child, Edward, survived his father's death, which occurred in 1870. Mrs. Perkins died in one short year after her husband. Mr. William H. In 1856 he moved onto a farm of 830 acres, upon which he remained until the spring of 1865, when he returned to Monticello, and soon after built a brick house, one of the best in Monticello, which he lived in until 1880. He escaped five different times, and each time was caught by bloodhounds. Three times he escaped through tunnels, once by burying himself while moving from one prison to the other, and last by overpowering the guard, shooting his arm off by slipping up where he was asleep and putting his foot on the trigger of the gun. After returning from the war, he finished his common education, and taught from 1866 to 1872. For two years he was in the drug business, then two years a carpenter, and since in abstract business and law.

MR. C. N. THOMPSON is a native of Fulton county, Illinois, from which place he came to Piatt county in 1879, and located on a farm owned by Mr. Samuel Allerton, of Chicago. Mr. Thomson was married in 1860, to Caroline Putman, and has five children, A. C., Charles Nelson, Jessie L. and Berintha M., who are attending the St. Mary's School at Knoxville, and Pamilla. Mr. Thompson went to the army from Fulton county in Co. E, of the 103d regiment. He was in the commissary department most of the time, but was in the battle of Vicksburg and others. Mr. Thompson is now residing on the farm lately owned by Messrs Frank and Ed. Williams.

MR. A. B. TROWBRIDGE, farmer, Monticello, was born in Ohio, from which state he moved to Illinois about 1849. He was married in 1861, to Ann C. Moore, and has had four children, William Thomas, Samantha Josie, Albert Levi and Opha Belle. They moved into Piatt county in 1879.

DR. CHRISTOPHER R. WARD was born August 6, 1809, in Abington, Washington county, Virginia, of Scotch-Irish parentage. While yet quite young he removed to Tazewell, Claiborne county, East Tennessee, where he lived until he arrived at the years of manhood. While yet almost a boy he made a trip into the then newly discovered gold country of northern Georgia and Alabama, and spent some months in searching for gold. The territory in which gold was found then belonged to the Cherokee Indians. For a time the excitement in regard to the discovery rivaled that which, after many years, occurred on the discovery of gold in California. Notwithstanding the treaty with the Indians and the proclamation of the President, the gold-bearing territory was overrun with fortune-hunters, until at length, by authority of the government, they were forcibly removed by United States troops sent there for that purpose. The subject of our sketch studied medicine at Knoxville, in East Tennessee, and finally removed to Edgar county, Illinois, in 1832, where he was married to Miss Elizabeth Hobbs, by whom he had one son, T. G. Ward, who now resides in Missouri. After her death he was married to Miss Nancy Somerville, then residing in Edgar county, who survives him. The children of this marriage were John Ward, who adopted his father's profession and was quite successful as a physician, practicing at Lovington, Illinois, until his death, which occurred in 1875; Sarepta, who married C. W. Noyes and now resides in St. Joseph, Missouri; Mary, who married James Holmes, now of Chicago, and Martha, who married H. E. Huston and still resides in Monticello, Illinois. Soon after his second marriage he concluded to remove to Piatt county and try practicing his profession. Up to that time he had tried farming and school teaching and a little of everything that came to hand. He arrived in Monticello with his young family in the year 1845, and before he had had time to unload his few household goods he was called upon to visit professionally one of the citizens who was dangerously ill, and from that time until he was finally compelled, in 1870, to relinquish his practice, by the premonitions of heart disease, he never knew what it was to rest from his labors. Through sunshine and storm, daylight and darkness, summer and winter, he was always ready to go in answer to the cry of distress. At the time of his location in Monticello the county and town was but sparsely inhabited, and he was the only practicing physician in the county. His practice for years afterward extended from Sadorus Grove on the east to Friends Creek on the west, from Mackville in the south to Mahomet in the north; or in other words, about fifteen miles in all directions from Monticello. Such was the urgency and frequency of his calls, that repeatedly he was compelled to get what little slumber he could while riding horseback over the the then trackless prairies from one lone cabin to another. The greater part of the settlers at that time were very poor, yet he never let the fact that he would probably have to take his pay in produce, and as likely get nothing for his services, make him hesitate when the call for assistance came. Nevertheless he had his reward in the universal esteem in which he was and is held by this community. He was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church. Relinquishing his practice in 1870, he immediately set about putting his affairs in order to receive the summons which he felt would sooner or later call him from his earthly labors. But few persons have left their financial matters in better shape. Finally, after facing the destroyer manfully for years, he gently and peacefully passed over the river on April 22, 1881. His remains were buried in the cemetery north of Monticello.*

SQUIRE WILEY.—Addison J. Wiley was born November 1, 1810, and was named for Joseph Addison, of literary renown. His father, Moses Wiley, was born in Virginia, on the Rappahannock river, was of Welch and German descent, and was in the revolutionary war at the age of fourteen. He married Miss Rachel Lehew, who was of French descent. They had ten children, seven of whom were boys. Mr. Wiley and his family moved to Indiana while it was yet a territory. Mr. A. J. Wiley remembers that while his folks were in Indiana, in 1814, Mr. James A. Piatt, when assistant provision contractor for Gen. Harrison, fed pack-horses on his father's farm. A. J. Wiley was married in Indiana in 1834, to Sarah Tenbrooke. They had nine children, three of whom were born in Indiana. Charles Wiley died in 1864, leaving a wife (now Mrs. Johnson) and four children. Amelia is the wife of Albert Miner. George Wiley died in the army in Nashville, Tennessee. Rachel married Wesley Goodwin. James Wiley makes his home in Monticello. Allen Wiley married Fannie Wood. On the 13th of August, 1860, Mr. A. J. Wiley and Mrs. Campbell were married. The second Mrs. Wiley died October 5, 1876, leaving three children, Belle Campbell and Frank and Lena Wiley. In 1837 Mr. Wiley came to Illinois to look up a place for a new home. He bought land, 40 acres of which was timber and 40 acres prairie land, of Mr. Abraham Marquiss and Mr. William Barnes in what is now Piatt county. He then returned to Indiana and remained until 1839, when he moved out to his new home. His wife had come out a few months previous with Mr. Tenbrooke's family. They lived on their farm until 1840, when they moved into the cabin in which four of James A. Piatt's sons were then living. After boarding for a time with these persons Mr. Wiley moved into the town of Monticello, in which there were about three houses in 1840. In 1840 Mr. Wiley was made constable, which office he held two years, when he became justice of the peace, and he still has the position, having been out of the office only about four and a half years during forty years' time. We noticed in an old county paper not long since that of the several hundred decisions Mr. Wiley had made in his position as squire only two have been reversed. Mr. Wiley relates the following incident of Abraham Lincoln. When Lincoln & McDougal were practicing law here, they entertained each other in various ways, and at one time tried to see which could throw an old meat-axe the farthest. The two were standing in the street a little west of the southwest corner of the public square. After each had thrown the axe a time or two Mr. Lincoln took it and, after swinging it around his head, slung it westward and into the Lizard run. Upon seeing where the axe lit, McDougal exclaimed: "Why didn't you do that before? Here I've been almost throwing my arms off trying to beat you!" Lincoln enjoyed the joke very much.

MR. CHARLES WATTS (deceased) was born March 25, 1835, in Caledonian county, Vermont. He came to Monticello about 1855, taught school the first year, and began practicing law the next year, and became a most successful lawyer of the county. He was school and county treasurer for a number of years in the county. He went back to Vermont, and married Lodoskey A. Spencer, November 22, 1858. Four of their children are living, Willie E., Charles P., Lena M. and Harry S. Mr. Watts died February 4, 1875, and Monticello thus lost one of her most honored and respected citizens. Mrs. Watts' sister, Phebe Spencer, now Mrs. Henry Bodwell, came to Monticello in 1859. Mr. and Mrs. Bodwell have two children, Bertie and Agatha.

MR. L. B. WEAVER, farmer, Monticello, is a native of Virginia, from which state he moved to Ohio, and then came to Monticello in 1843. He lived in the old Piatt cabin for a time, and has lived in the vicinity of Monticello ever since. He owns 80 acres of land, where he now lives, and has improved the place himself. He was married August 17, 1837, to Sarah A. Neal, and has had fifteen children, twelve of whom are living, and all are within a radius of eight or ten miles. Not many families so large remain so near each other. Mary J. married J. E. B. Fowler, and has three children, Berry, Charles and Louis, and lives in Monticello. George, who was in the late war, married Kate Connor, and has three children, Maud, Edna and Nellie. Margaret was the wife of Daniel Bush, who died, leaving five children, George, Mary, Frank, Alice and Bertie D. Mrs. Bush next married Mr. William Barnhart, who had several children. Martha A. Weaver married Daniel Russell. Elizabeth is the wife of Henry Martin, and has four children, Harry, Irving, Sadie and Elsie. James Weaver married Mary Johnson, and has three children, Linnie, Claud and Ollie. Eliza Weaver became the wife of Franklin Sellers, and has one son, Leonard B. Charles Weaver married Minnie Jones. Kate Weaver married John Dresback, and has three children. Winfield married Ella Lowe. Nannie and John E. Weaver are still at home.

MR. JOHN WOOLINGTON is a farmer, and lives about three miles northwest of Monticello. He is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Illinois about 1843 or 1844. He married Isabella Kyle, who died in 1848, leaving four children, two of whom are now living. Sarah married James Davis, and now lives in Monticello. They have one daughter, Ida Isabelle, who graduated in the Monticello High School in 1881. Henry N. married Charity Parker. They, with their three children, Otho, Adelbert and May, have quite recently moved to Iowa. Mr. John Woolington married Mrs. Susan Devore, in 1849. They are living quietly and contentedly in a neat frame house on the farm that Mr. William Barnes lived on for so many years.

MR. A. H. WILDMAN, photographer, Monticello, is a native of Trumbull county, Ohio, from which state he moved to Piatt county, Unity Township, in 1850. A portion of the time since, he made his home in Douglass county, but in January, 1871, he moved to Monticello, where he has since resided. At present he is the only photographer in the place. He owns the property where his business office is, and also owns his residence property. He was married to Hannah J. Hodge, and has two children, Maud A. and William T. In 1861 he went to the army in Co. G of the 13th Ill. Cav. He was discharged later on account of disability, but re-enlisted in November, 1862, in Battery I, of the 2d Ill. Lt. Art., and was discharged June 14, 1865. He was in nearly all the battles from Chattanooga to the sea, and to Goldsborough, North Carolina. While in the army he lost his hearing by a premature explosion, and was otherwise injured, so that he deservedly draws a pension at the present time. Mr. Wildman's father, Mr. Thomas Wildman, settled in Unity township in 1850. His wife died after the family had started to move from Ohio to Illinois. Mr. Thomas Wildman was a constant sufferer for nineteen years before his death in 1870, and for thirty-two months previous to his decease he never spoke a word aloud. He left six children, five of whom are living in Piatt county. Thomas P. Wildman married Elizabeth Shonkwiler, and lives in Unity township. Eunice Arvilla became the wife of Aaron Harshbarger, but died, leaving six children. Henry Wildman married Sarah E. Quick, has six children, and lives on the old home place. Electa is the wife of Napoleon B. Shonkwiler, has a large family of children, and lives in Unity township. Emerzilla is the wife of Samuel Harshbarger, of Unity township, and has six children.

MR. R. B. WINCHESTER, harness maker, Monticello, is a native of Madison county, Ohio. His father was from New York, his mother from Tennessee, and of English descent. They had ten children, two of whom lived in Piatt county. Mr. Winchester was married in 1852, to Frances A. Tinder, in Madison county, Ohio. They moved to Piatt county in 1853, settled in Monticello, where he has been in the harness business ever since. They have had four children, the eldest dying when eighteen months old. Lewis E. married Annie E. Maddy, of Muncie, Indiana, in October, 1876. They have one child, Eva. Mr. Winchester is a druggist, in Muncie, Indiana. Lucy Winchester died July 3, 1876. Eva is at home; she is a graduate of the Monticello high school, in which school she is a successful teacher. Mr. Winchester went to the army in 1861, in Co. C of the 73d Ill. Inf. He held the position of 2d lieut., and was out about five months, coming home on account of sickness. The battle of Perrysville is the principal one in which he participated. Mrs. Winchester has been a mantua-maker and milliner in Monticello for the past twenty years. She has always been one of the principal milliners, and oftentimes the only one, but she is never too busy to make use of her rare faculty of good nursing at the bed-side of the sick in her community. Clara, Mr. R. B. Winchester's sister, married James Hall, and lives in Indiana. She came here in 1856 or 1857, met Mr. Hall, who went to Indiana, married her, then came here and lived for several years.

MR. C. B. WENGENROT, furniture dealer, Monticello, is a native of Germany. He came to America in 1853, and in 1856 located in Monticello, where he opened the first furniture store in the place. He now owns two business houses, three residences and seven lots in Monticello. He belongs to the Odd-Fellows lodge of the town. Mr. Wengenroth was married in 1858, to Catherine Minick. Only one, Lillie, of their five children is living.

MR. SAMUEL B. WEBSTER, Mr. Webster's father, was a native of Kentucky, his mother of Virginia, while Ohio bears the honor of his nativity. He was one of a family of four, two of which are now living in this county. Mr. Webster moved to Champaign county in 1856, and in 1858 settled in Piatt county. He located in Monticello as a saddler, which occupation he continued until he was appointed postmaster, December 20, 1866. He was first appointed by postmaster General William Denison, during the administration of Andrew Johnson, and through the recommendation of the retiring postmaster, Wilson Cox, to the postmaster-general. He was reappointed under U. S. Grant, and again under R. B. Hayes. Mr. Webster was married in 1861, to Ann M. Dyer. Four children have blessed their union, three of whom, C. Kate, Isaac W. and Lena B., are living. The people in and about Monticello will long remember the genial face of the present postmaster, as he greets and distributes mail to the eager inquiring throng that fills the office so frequently.

MR. WILLIAM C. WEBSTER, formerly a harness dealer in Monticello, was born in Ohio. He moved from his native state to Piatt county in 1857 and located at Monticello, and that has been his home ever since. He remained in the saddlery business until 1879. The winter of 1881-2 he made a trip to California with anticipation of locating in that state. He is lavish of praise for the Golden State, but did not move to it as he anticipated. He is now living just outside the corporation line of Monticello. He was married in December, 1854, to Mary Dyer, who died in August, 1870, leaving five children, four of whom are now living. Charles, her eldest son, died of consumption when but fifteen years old. James married Miss Hattie Burgess in 1880, and is running a book and stationery store in Monticello. Miss Lillie, after her mother's death, did ample credit to herself as her father's housekeeper. She and her brother and sister, Eddie and Katie, are still at home. On June 25, 1872, Mr. Webster married Louisa Rue, a native of New Jersey. She has had four children, three of whom, Lulu May, Pauline and Myrtie Belle, are living. Mr. Webster has not escaped the office of school-director, and was once elected coroner.

MR. G. R. WARRICK, farmer, Monticello, is a native of Pike county, and moved to Piatt county in 1878. He was married in 1873, to Lucy E. Burch, a native of Pike county. They own a farm of eighty acres, which is all under cultivation. There is a good house on the place, some five hundred trees have been planted out, and a new barn is being built.

MR. A. ZYBELL, Monticello, is a native of Prussia, who came to America in 1851, and in 1858 located in Monticello, where he is now engaged in the boot and shoe business. He was married in 1857, to Louisa Hammersmidt and has six children. Robert is in Iowa; Bertie married Will Wall, has one child, Allie, and lives in Monticello; Albert, Willie, August and Emma are at home. Mr. Zybell owns a residence, two business houses, and four lots in Monticello. He also owns a farm of two hundred acres in Goose Creek township, and has put all the improvements on the place. A barn and residence was erected on the farm in 1882.

CHAPTER XIII.

BEMENT TOWNSHIP.

THIS township lies directly south of Monticello township, and also contains forty-eight sections of land. A portion of Champaign county bounds it on the east, Unity township on the south, while Willow Branch and Cerro Gordo townships form the western boundary.

A ridge running across the northwestern corner of the township causes the land there to be a great deal higher than it is in the southern and eastern part of the township. In fact the lowness of the land in the southern and eastern part debarred settlement therein for a number of years, and even yet it is thinly settled in some parts. But since tiling has begun to be used in the county much has been done to prepare the exceedingly rich soil for cultivation. A very much greater portion can be cultivated now compared with the tillable land of twenty years ago, and much more improvement is anticipated, too, in the next few years.

The extreme northwestern portion of the township drains toward the Sangamon, while all the rest of the township is drained by the Lake Fork of the Okaw, which comes into the township in its northeastern section, runs southwest and then southeast, leaving the township about the middle of its southern boundary line. The fall in the stream is very slight. After the rainy season the banks are soon overrun, and then for days and weeks the stream, through miles of its course, has the appearance of a lake or swamp; and because of this slowness in discharging its waters, we suppose, the stream has been called Lake Fork. The land traversed by the Lake Fork is very rich indeed, and when the channel of the stream is once deepened so that the surplus water can be turned from off the farming land, we anticipate that the finest crops in the country can be raised on what is now untillable land.

Two railroads pass through this township. The Wabash road strikes the eastern boundary line about one mile from the northern boundary line, runs southwest through the township, crossing the western boundary line about three and one-half miles from the northwestern corner of the township. This road was the first one built in the county, and it has assisted greatly in the growth of the same. A road formerly known as the Chicago & Paducah railroad crosses the township nearly two miles from and runs parallel with the western boundary line of the township. This road now belongs to the great Wabash system. These roads cross at Bement.

The following, from an article written December 25, 1879, by Mr. L. B. Wing, will show the condition of at least a part of Bement township a quarter of a century ago :

“It is just twenty-six years ago to-day since I first saw the spot where this town is located. On Christmas day, 1853, three ‘solitary horsemen’ halted upon the ridge which divides the waters of the Sangamon and the Kaskaskia, and looked southward. It was a beautiful day—like autumn, rather than winter. A magnificent view, limited only by the powers of vision, was before us. It was like looking out upon the ocean. No farm or orchard, no living thing or sign of human habitation! Everything, so far as we could see, was just as it had been for centuries. We knew that in the groves of timber that skirted the water-course a few pioneers had built their cabins, and for years had supplied their simple wants by hunting and by a little farming of the most primitive sort. But their proximity was not apparent to us and in no way dispelled the sense of complete solitude that oppressed us.

“The government of the United States still owned this land, and offered it in small parcels at the minimum price of $1.25 an acre.

“We dismounted and threw ourselves upon the sunny slope to enjoy the view, and debated the question whether it was likely that this prairie, after remaining hundreds of years unoccupied, was now about to attain any particular value. All who had preceded us had evidently come to the conclusion that it was like air and water, valuable and necessary, so far as it could be used, but was in too large supply to be worth buying. Was it likely that in the little span of time represented by our lives, that this condition of things would greatly change?

“But we had come to the state predisposed to own a small piece of it, and after we had consulted maps and rode over the land we drove stakes, selecting adjoining tracts, so that we might not lose each other, and in 1854 we secured titles to as much as our slender means would pay for. The year following the deer and prairie wolves were startled from their homes by an engineering corps surveying the route for what is now the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific railway. With this prospect in view we at once gave attention to our new purchase. This town was laid out on the tract as the nearest railroad point to the county seat, and I fell into the line of improvement by first hauling with ox teams, from Urbana, in Champaign county, the materials for a house, the third built in the town. The next season the ‘iron horse’ made his way through Bement, from the Wabash river to Springfield. At this date the land was all bought up and the immigration was rapid. A large tract was purchased by Col. John S. Williams, now United States senator from Kentucky, who, with his brother, made this county their residence. With the same energy and pluck which won for him his sobriquet of ‘Cerro Gordo Williams’ in the Mexican war, he pushed his improvements and rapidly transformed the prairie into cultivated fields.

“Other railroads were projected and built, and new homes were established at a rate of increase unknown in the older states. The brothers Bodman, of Massachusetts, four of them, were of the first settlers and largest land owners; men of enterprise, wealth and influence. The brothers Scott, from Lexington, Kentucky, Joseph and Isaac, honored by all who ever knew them, did their full share in the development of this county.

“There are many immigrants from old Licking, that have dropped in here at various dates. The Hon. Francis E. Bryant, who built the first warehouse in Bement, though a native of New Hampshire, was educated at Granville, and still remembers his college associates and teachers with a lively interest. Then in different parts of the county are, Gardner, Gregory, Mitchell, Fristoe, Orr, Caughenbaugh, Dickinson, Dyarman, Somers, Tippet, Wright, Wetherell, Beck, Reese, Partridge, and others whose names I do not now recall.

“I desire, in closing, to bear witness in one thing more, to the credit of the settlers. It came to me with great force, on a summer day, while lying in dreamy reverie upon the same slope from which so long ago I first saw this broad prairie. The spires, the shaded dwellings, the shops and stores of Bement, a mile or two away, now obstruct the range of vision. Hedges and orchards, farm-houses, distant moving trains of cars, and things of life arrest the eye. But the transformation in all this is not greater than that which has come to this very spot. Now, hundreds of silver maples and groups of evergreen shelter and adorn this ridge of ground, and attest the good taste and civilization of the people. Their ‘city of the dead’ is here laid out in no stinted measure, as though they grudged ‘God’s acre,’ but with broad, well-kept avenues and walks, with shrubs and flowers, they have made it a spot worthy of the dust it is to receive, and the associations with which their children will regard it. Already rising monuments tell of the mother, the child, the village favorite, the soldier brought from southern battle-field, of strong men fallen by the way, and mark the spot where the hardy pioneers of the county—

‘The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.’”

Early settlements.—From all accounts we consider that the first settlement in Bement township was made by William Bailey, not long previous to 1854, in section 5. Another early settler was John Hughes, who lived near the head of Lake Fork timber. The first election in the township was held in his log house. There were not more than six voters in the entire township, and Jos. Moore was one of the judges. Mr. Smith Quick bought out Jno. Hughes, and Mr. Joseph Moore bought land of Mr. Bailey. Both Mr. Moore and Mr. Quick are yet living in the township.

These settlements were made previous to the building of the present Wabash railroad through the township. After the building of the said road settlements began to be made quite rapidly.

Bement.—Bement is situated seven miles south of Monticello, the county seat, and is a village of about 1,500 inhabitants. The land upon which Bement is located was purchased in 1854 by Joseph Bodman, who bought about 6,000 acres of land, which are now owned by himself, L. B. Wing and Lewis and Luther Bodman. It was through Joseph Bodman’s influence that Bement was located on its present site. L. B. Wing, Joseph Bodman and Henry P. Little donated ground upon which the original town was laid out. L. B. Wing sold in 1854 to Hunt & Carter, agents for the Great Western railroad, thirty-three acres of land in section 19 for $1. The railroad buildings and some of the business houses of the town were located on this land. In fact Joseph Bodman is connected with every link of Bement's history. He assisted in laying out the town, as did also Joseph Mallory, Sullivan Burgess and James Bryden, and made an addition to the town of Bement. The Wabash railroad crossing is on his addition. Bement was surveyed during the summer of 1854 and recorded by Josiah Hunt in January 1855.

Joseph Bodman, J. H. and J. M. Camp, William Ellis, and Thompson and Marion Pettit were the first settlers of Bement. Mr. Joseph Alvord moved into a log house on Dr. Bodman's farm, which belongs to the estate of the late Chris Kesner, and boarded the men who built the first house in Bement. Mr. Alvord also hauled lumber from Champaign for the first house which was built in the town. In April, 1855, this first house, which stood just west of the present Christian church and was owned by Joseph Bodman, was erected under the supervision of T. T. Pettit and J. M. Camp. Joseph Nye and wife kept boarders in this house. They were succeeded by Mr. Crippen. Mr. Bodman also erected the second house in town, which stood just west of the first one. Soon after he erected a small office building, which was the first business house of the town. It served for various purposes, and until the Wabash depot was moved from Decatur was used as a depot until the winter of 1856.

Mr. and Mrs. Force came to Bement in 1855-56, Mrs. Force reaching the place in January, 1856. In the spring of 1856, after boarding in Monticello for a time, they moved into the third house in Bement. About this time Joseph Alvord, who had been living for a time in the second house of the town, moved into a house built on his farm, now owned by Mr. Martin. Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Yost came to Bement April 29, 1856. Mr. Yost built on the ground now owned by Mr. J. C. Evans, but ere a great while moved on to his farm north of Bement which is still owned by his family.

Near the time the first settlements were made in Bement Mr. B. G. Hopkins moved onto a farm since known as the Elihu Fisher farm. He only remained a few years. Mr. F. E. Bryant moved to Bement in 1856, and his family made the seventh in the place. He started the first store, bought Joseph Bodman's warehouse, and began handling grain. Mr. Bryant's building, where Mr. Cooper has his store, was the first brick building of the town, and probably the first public entertainment was a dance held in Mr. Bryant's old warehouse. For several years each new building was dedicated by a dancing party.

Before the establishment of a postoffice in Bement the mail, though brought first to Bement, was distributed in Monticello. Mr. Joseph Bodman was the first postmaster of the town. The present one, Mr. S. K. Bodman, has ably filled his position for a number of years.

Mrs. Yost reports the following: The first couple married in Bement were Mr. Thomas W. Bane and Martha W. Hadsall, who were married at Aaron Yost's in June, 1856. Mr. Charles Evans is now living in the house where the ceremony was performed.

A Methodist minister preached the first sermon in the town at Mr. Crippen's.

The first birth and death in the town was that of Mr. James' child. The child was buried in 1856 near Mr. Haldeman's mill.

The first Sabbath-school, a union one, was organized in May, 1856.

Mrs. Yost says that the first she knew of the public square, Mr. Alvord took his father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Stanton, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Booth, Mr. and Mrs. Force, and Mr. and Mrs. Yost, saying, "Now, ladies and gentlemen, I will take you a drive around the public square," and they, with laughter and jokes, went around the present public square, which then was but staked out.

Mr. T. T. Pettit thinks that the first sermon in the town was preached by Mr. Samuel Harshbarger, in the depot, and that Mr. Huston was the first stationary minister.

The first hotel of the place, the Sherman House, was built in 1857, and until the erection of the elegant masonic building, stood on the main business street of the town. It now stands to the rear of the masonic building. John Townsend built and kept the hotel for a time, until his death, when his widow undertook the supervision of the same.

In the spring of 1858 James McDowell came to Bement, and with Mr. Tho. Postlethwaite erected the hotel known as the Pennsylvania House. This building is still standing, and, under the name of Bement House, is kept by its worthy proprietor, Mr. Royal Thomas.

Mr. C. F. Tenney moved to Bement in 1859, and says that at that time Mr. Bryant's was the only dry goods store in the place. There were no sidewalks, the streets were not graded, and there was not a tree in the town. There were just enough ladies in the town who danced to form one set. School, and sometimes church, was held in a house built by Mr. Harper.

Milmine & Bodman had the first bank of the town ; Freese & Co., the second ; Fisher & Gregory, the third ; and Bryant & Bodman, the fourth. The first three of these were in a building in which the "Bement Gazette" office is now located, but the building then stood on the present site of D. S. Cole's shoe store. The only bank of the town is now known as the Bank of Bement.

In 1861 or 1862 some of the old settlers of the town, Messrs. Bryant, Bodman, and others, made preparations for and held the first fourth of July celebration of Bement in the school yard. Mr. C. D. Moore made the first speech, and was succeeded by Dr. Mitchell. Bement has held a number of celebrations since, and is surpassed by none as a patriotic town.

The names of a number of early settlers, not mentioned so far in this article, will be found among the biographies.

Bement of to-day.—A traveler on the Great Western road twenty-five years ago could find no point of resemblance in the present busy, energetic town as compared with the little station of a quarter of a century ago. To-day it has more beautiful trees than any town in the county ; then not one could be seen within three miles of the depot. Well built and substantial sidewalks have taken the place of the cob-walks of the early days. A number of quite elegant residences have taken the place of the first modest little cottages. The business houses have increased in size and number.

Since the Wabash railroad took possession of the Chicago and Paducah railroad an exceeding rapid improvement has been going on. Near a hundred new houses have been erected since then, and the population has made an increase of about four hundred. The Wabash company built an elegant new depot, by far the best in the county, in addition to a number of other railroad buildings near the crossing of the two roads.

Bement is "booming" just now, and persons desiring to locate in a thriving, energetic place cannot find a better one of its size in central Illinois.

THE CHURCHES.

In speaking of the churches of this town, as well as those in other parts of the county, we have endeavored to mention the most important items that have been furnished us. In some cases more items have been given than in others, and we thus have made more extended notice of such. We were disappointed in several instances in regard to the small amount of facts we could collect relating to the churches.

Methodist Episcopal church.—The Methodist church was organized in 1858, under the pastorate of Rev. Edward Rutledge, and Mr. C. D. Moore, C. Schoolcraft, Thomas Postlethwaite, William Stillwell, Robert McDowell and James McDowell were among the most prominent members. Their meetings were first held in the school-house, and afterward in Bryant's Hall. In 1863 a subscription was taken up for the purpose of building a church, and in 1864 the building was begun. In October of the same year Rev. H. Buck dedicated the church. During the period from the opening of the subscription to the dedication of the church, Rev. I. Groves, and D. P. Lyon were pastors. Until the conference of 1865 Bement was included in the Monticello circuit, but at this date it was detached from Monticello, and with Milmine and Cerro Gordo formed a new circuit. Rev. C. McKaskill was placed in charge. He soon was compelled to resign on account of ill health, and Rev. J. C. Lewis supplied his place.

In the fall of 1867 Bement was formed into a station, and Rev. H. S. Tryon was put in charge. About this time a belfry was built on the church, and a $150 bell was purchased. In 1876 a commodious parsonage, worth $1,600, was erected for the use of the pastor.

The following are the names of some of the ministers: Rev. N. S. Buckner, 1868; Rev. J. Montgomery, 1870 and 1871; Rev. Geo. M. Fortune, 1872; Rev. I. Villars, 1874; Rev. G. E. Ackerman, 1874; Rev. Jos. Winterbottom, 1875, and Rev. T. M. Dillon.

Protestant Episcopal church.—The first Episcopal preaching in Bement was done by Rev. J. W. Osborne, who was in the town in September, 1861. Soon it was planned that a parish should be formed and a meeting for the same was called; the name, the Church of the Atonement, was chosen and the following persons were elected to office: George Milmine and Tho. Cooper, senior and junior wardens respectively, and Frank M. Speed, F. E. Bryant, C. F. Tenney, Robert D. Niles, Jos. Bodman, Chas. Fisher and Edward Bodman, vestrymen. J. W. Osborne was made president, and Frank M. Speed, secretary. Judge Spear gives the names of about twenty-five communicants. The growth of this church has been somewhat slow, but of late the society has been making a good deal of advancement. Their church fairs are very interesting and successful. Preparations are being made for the building of a church there. This church has had an interest in the Christian church building, and their meetings have been held there.

Christian church.—The organization of this church dates in January, 1862, and according to Judge Spear, James Connor, jr., was the organizer, and the meeting was held at William Monroe's. The following names show the membership at the above date: B. G. Hopkins, Mary B. Hopkins, Samuel J. Hopkins, Sarah J. Hopkins, William Monroe, Jane Monroe, John J. Gosney, America S. Gosney, Martin R. Ruble, Johnathan Ruble, Joseph Shelton, Thomas Dunn, Elizabeth Evans, Caroline Yost, Ann E. and Susan Gosney. The following were the officers: William Monroe and S. Ruble, elders, and Thomas Dunn and Samuel Hopkins, deacons. The names of some of the ministers of the church are James Conner, A. J. Northcut, Elder Osborne, J. W. Perkins, S. M. Conner, Americus Conner, E. J. Hart, and Messrs. McFadden, Matthews, Carter, Munser, Rice, McCorkle, Johnson, Frame, Spear, Pointer, Hodson and others.

The church building was erected in 1867, and cost about $800. Lately a bell has been purchased, and the new belfry adds much to the appearance of the church. Since the organization of the church there has been a total of over two hundred names enrolled, and the membership the present year is about ninety-six. The Sunday-school has an attendance of one hundred and twenty-five persons, with thirteen teachers. W. A. Godwin is superintendent. The trustees of the church are G. C. Evans, B. G. Hopkins and J. J. Gosney. The elders are G. W. Thompson, H. Martin and William McGaffey. Calvin Boake is deacon.

Presbyterian church.—The following extracts from a sermon by Rev. A. W. Ringland will tell the story of the Bement Presbyterian church better than can be told with other material which we have collected:

“August 29, 1868, this church was organized in the Methodist Episcopal church, Bement, by Revs. Thomas A. Chestnut and T. P. Emerson, with eight members, whose names are as follows: E. C. Camp, Elizabeth J. Camp, Mary E. Camp, Wm. Newton, Margaret Newton, Sarah E. Bryant, Emily F. Swaney and Mrs. Scott, with E. C. Camp and Wm. Newton as elders. January 30, 1870, six trustees were elected, as follows: Jos. Bodman, president, with F. E. Bryant, Warren A. Pierce, A. G. Gregory, Jos. M. Scott, and Wm. M. Camp, who, the records tell us, with the congregation began to consider the expediency of building a house of worship. Financial energy marks the very first pages of the records. The salary, though very modest, is paid. Within three months of the time when the church was organized there is a record of a contribution of $7 to the board of home missions, and within seven months of its organization another contribution of $13 to the board of church erection. A church which might have put on beggars' airs — a church without a building, worshipping in a town hall, giving to other churches that they may have buildings. These were two of the best days' work this church could possibly have done. It may not be business, but it is decidedly christian, to esteem others better than ourselves. And there is more danger of churches dying outright from supreme selfishness than from prodigality in benevolence.

“For convenience let me speak of matters, first, ecclesiastical, and second, secular.

“1. Ecclesiastical.—(1) Pastors. The first supply of the pulpit, Rev. Thos. M. Chestnut, seems not to have remained to exceed ten months, probably only seven. Rev. S. A. Hummer occupied the pulpit for about fifteen months, Rev. B. F. Sharp beginning October 1, 1871, ending his engagement with the church April 1, 1878. July 18, the present pastorate began, in the same year, which has just reached its fourth anniversary. In the strict construction of terms, the church was under a system of stated supplies until 1880, when your present pastor was regularly installed. (2) Elders. The church has had, in all its history, eight elders, as follows: E. C. Camp, Wm. Newton, Geo. Sandford, W. M. Camp, Jno. H. Murphy, L. W. Bodman, Geo. F. Miller and T. W. Scott. E. C. Camp alone remains of the original bench, after fourteen years of uninterrupted service. Two have removed from the bonds of the congregation, four are active, and one, at present, is inactive. (3) Deacons. On April 6, of present year, this office was filled for the first time by the election of Louis H. Alvord and Henry M. Hays. (4) Members. The whole number of members received from the foundation of the church has been 154. One has been excommunicated, six have been placed on the “retired list” because their whereabouts are not known to the session, ten have died, thirty-one have been dismissed to other churches, while 108 still remain upon the roll of membership. (5) The Sabbath school has been one of unwavering prosperity. It was organized about 1871, with L. W. Bodman as superintendent. His energy and zeal are notably linked with its organization and early success. After two years' service Jno. H. Murphy became his successor for one year, who in turn was succeeded by Wm. M. Camp, who now holds and has since held the position with favor and capability, combining enough of the military with the christian to give symmetry to the movement of the school. The maximum enrollment is 255 for any year. (6) The Ladies' Missionary Society, originally 'Foreign,' but latterly 'Home and Foreign,' has been one of marked activity, both in gifts and missionary spirit. Under its tuition a children's band, known as 'The Sunbeams,' with about eighty names on its roll, has been kept in active operation for a number of years. Beyond the monthly meetings of each of these, there has been kept up a ladies' society for general work, and since January, 1879, a ladies' prayer meeting, with varying numbers and interest. Intermittent instruction has been given by the pastor in the shorter catechism to primary pupils, and in historical portions of the Old Testament by the pastor's wife, at the parsonage, on Tuesday evenings, to academic youth.)

"2. The Secular.—(1) The trustees. The original bench of trustees was Joseph Bodman, F. E. Bryant, Warren A. Pierce, A. G. Gregory, Joseph M. Scott, Wm. M. Camp and L. W. Bodman. The only changes ever made in this board have been suggested by vacancies occasioned by removals from the bounds of the congregation. Warren A. Pierce, Jos. M. Scott, A. G. Gregory and L. W. Bodman having removed to other places, their seats were filled by the election of C. F. Tenney, Abram Hays, A. D. Newton and J. C. Miller. The same president holds office to-day who was called to the chair at its first election. Three of the original six members remain. Two who were elected when the organization was very young are still there. All are living except Mr. Gregory. This board, which has been its own successor very largely, has piloted the finances of the church through all kinds of weather, to the present outlook of permanency which we now witness. This board was no mere honorary body. At its first meeting, as soon as officers were elected, we find the 'subscription book accepted with its conditions.' Immediately following this it is

"Resolved, That we take immediate measures to erect a church building, and obtain such additional subscriptions as can be obtained.'

"A committee was appointed to receive proposals for locating church, and report to the board at its next meeting. It was at once

"Resolved, That the trustees will expend $6,000 in erecting a church and purchasing ground."

In speaking of the building era, Rev. Ringland divides it into three divisions. During the first over $6,000 was subscribed, less than $250 of which was given by actual members of the church, and the church building built and the basement completed. The audience room was next completed, and the church was dedicated. Under the third division Rev. Ringland mentions April 18, 1880, as the time when the wind lifted seventy-five feet of the church spire during church service. Ere noon the next day $200 was subscribed for its repair. In this period, too, was mentioned the building of a $1,700 parsonage.

“Summing up in rude outline what has been accomplished by this church and congregation, it may be said :

“1. That for purposes of building and repairs alone, the trustees of this church, first and last, have given from their own private funds $5,275. This includes nothing given by them on salaries or for benevolence. It includes no amount given by other members of their families. You know me too well to charge me with catering to sentiment when I say that their record as officers, taking the burden of care on their own hearts, for the completion of a very generous building for a town like this,—giving their time, and leading every one in the matter of generosity,—deserves to be noted beyond the limits of this congregation. It deserves to be held up as a chapter of unwritten church history, that others may take knowledge of how a consecrated zeal can clear away difficulties of a very grave character. They have been leaders to you, not drivers. They have shouldered the heavy end of the beam and then said, come. And I believe that if you read their motives by their past acts, if they ever say ‘come’ again, you will be more ready than ever to heed their bidding.

“2. The grand total given by this church and congregation with such foreign help as has been given you, is more than $32,000. I have traced with ease $31,598.21. The benevolence of this church, from its beginning up to 1877, is not included, for want of sources of information. But it will add a considerable sum to the amount really audited. It has been a giving church and congregation from the beginning. It has paid its debts. It has sought to carry honor unto the sanctuary, as the records show. Nor has it grown poor, but rather ‘increased in goods.’ It would be an omission not to speak of aid granted by the ladies of this church and congregation. Their labors have been so diversified as to elude detail. They put themselves on record first with $200 aid toward the construction of the church. Aside from their matronly oversight, their contributions rose, first and last, to a sum exceeding $1,000.”

The Catholic church.—Rev. A. Voght, of Decatur, was the first Catholic minister in Bement. He visited the town occasionally until 1866, when the present church building, costing about $2,100, was erected. About this time Rev. P. Toner was stationed in Champaign county, and Bement came under his charge. He came to the town once a month until a church was built at Ivesdale, when the resident minister of that place took charge of this station. The church at Ivesdale was organized in 1865, as a mission of Champaign, by Rev. P. Toner. Rev. P. Birmingham then became the resident priest in 1868. The Rev. Birmingham died, and about seven years ago the Rev. Tho. Shanley, the present priest, succeeded him. Rev. Shanley is reported as being a finely-educated man and a gentleman in every respect. His congregations, both at Ivesdale and Bement, have all confidence in him. The membership at Ivesdale includes over one thousand persons. A number of these people reside in Piatt county and are good workers and earnest citizens. The original church at Ivesdale was built about 1865, but in 1876 an addition was made to the same.

SOCIETIES AND ASSOCIATIONS.

Bement Library Association.—A preliminary meeting of those interested in procuring a library for public use was held November 16, 1866, in the school-house. George L. Spear was chairman and R. S. Hopkins, secretary. At this meeting a report was given in of a subscription list amounting to $134. Committees were appointed for getting further subscriptions and soliciting donations of books. The subscribers met in December, 1866, and a constitution was adopted. The first officers were George L. Spear, president; R. S. Hopkins, vice-president; Joseph Bodman, treasurer; and H. A. Coffeen, librarian. It was originally called the Bement Library Association, but was chartered October, 1878, under the name of The Library Association of Bement. The present officers are Dr. Vance, president; H. D. Newton, secretary and treasurer; Mrs. Force, librarian, which position she has held for six years. The directors are Mrs. Knapp, Mrs. Bacon, Mrs. Bodman, Dr. Vance, and Mr. Joseph Bodman. At present the books in the library number 1,224, and somewhere near a hundred are added each year. The circulation is about 3,000 books a year. By paying $10 any one can become a life member and pay no dues. By paying $5 one can become an elector and pay fifty cents each year. Annual members pay $1. Two books each are allowed a week. The rest of the money is raised by subscription. It is open once a week, on Saturday afternoons, for two hours. The association is in a very flourishing condition, the number of members and amount of money received increases each year. Bement has reason to be very proud of the library, as it is by far the best in the county.

Lodges.—The items in regard to the Masonic lodge were kindly furnished by Mr. C. F. Tenney.

The Bement Masonic Association was chartered under the laws of the State of Illinois, October 4, 1875, "for the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting thereon a building for masonic purposes for the promotion of universal benevolence and charity." The first directors were Joseph Bodman, W. M. Camp, C. F. Tenney, S. A. Lodge, J. O. Sparks and Robert Fisher. They organized by electing Joseph Bodman president; F. E. Bryant, treasurer, and C. F. Tenney, secretary. The directors issued and sold stock, and with the proceeds purchased a lot on the southeast corner of Bodman and Piatt streets and erected thereon a two-story brick building with basement. The corner-stone was laid by the grand lodge, A. F. and A. M., with the usual formalities, on May 25, 1876. The hall was dedicated to Masonry by the same body in the autumn following. The present board of directors are J. O. Sparks, Horace Haldennan, Robert Fisher, D. D. Kimmel, W. M. Camp and C. F. Tenney. The present officers of the board are D. D. Kimmel, president; F. E. Bryant, treasurer, and C. F. Tenney, secretary.

Bement Chapter, No. 65, Royal Arch Masons, received its charter October 7, 1864. The charter members were Joseph Bodman, F. E. Bryant, J. O. Sparks, A. G. Gregory, C. Fisher, Jr., J. M. Taylor, C. F. Tenney, George Milmine, T. T. Pettit, E. C. Bodman, E. B. Sprague, J. M. Camp, O. C. McConny, S. B. Hawkes, George S. Dustin, James Wharton, Joshua Hill. The first officers were Joseph Bodman, high priest; F. E. Bryant, king; J. O. Sparks, scribe; S. B. Hawkes, treasurer; E. C. Bodman, secretary; George Milmine, captain of the host; C. F. Tenney, principal sojourner; J. M. Taylor, royal arch captain; C. Fisher, Jr., grand master of the third veil; A. G. Gregory, grand master of the second veil; T. T. Pettit, grand master of the first veil; Joshua Hill, tyler. The present officers are V. S. Ruby, high priest; A. T. M. Wetherall, king; W. W. Vance, scribe; W. M. Camp, treasurer; E. B. Sprague, secretary; G. A. Stadler, captain of the host; F. A. Jones, principal sojourner; B. B. Bacon, royal arch captain; Isaac Witherspoon, grand master of the third veil; J. C. Klapp, grand master of the second veil; J. F. Knapp, grand master of the first veil; T. T. Pettit, tyler. Present membership, fifty.

Bement Lodge, No. 365, A. F. and A. M., received its charter October 1, 1861. The charter members were F. E. Bryant, H. A. Bodman, Charles Fisher, Jr., A. G. Gregory, G. M. Gregory, J. W. C. Gray, John A. Helman, T. T. Pettit, W. L. Ryder, J. O. Sparks, William Stilwell, E. B. Sprague, J. M. Taylor and Aaron Yost. The first officers were F. E. Bryant, worshipful master; J. O. Sparks, senior warden; William Stilwell, junior warden; T. T. Pettit, treasurer; E. B. Sprague, secretary; J. A. Helman, senior deacon; C. Fisher, Jr., junior deacon; Aaron Yost, tyler. The present officers are W. M. Vance, worshipful master; G. A. Stadler, senior warden; V. S. Ruby, junior warden; W. M. Camp, treasurer; Thomas Lamb, Jr., secretary; Charles McGaffey, senior deacon; John C. Klapp, junior deacon; J. F. Knapp, senior steward; William Parker, junior steward; T. T. Pettit, tyler. Present membership, sixty-four.

Order of Odd-Fellows.—The Irwin Lodge, No. 344, Bement, was chartered October, 1867, with R. F. Jones, past grand; Aaron Misenhelter, past grand; D. C. Moffitt, past grand; and E. O. Wallace, Peter Caughenbaugh and J. N. Bills as charter members. At the first meeting the following named persons were elected and installed in their respective offices: E. O. Wallace, noble grand; J. N. Bills, vice grand; R. F. Jones, recording secretary; and Peter Caughenbaugh, treasurer. Grand Master Herr was the installing officer. At this first meeting the following persons were admitted to membership: C. Schoolcraft, Samuel Dearing, Joseph W. Fristoe, J. A. Force, C. Newton, Wm. L. Finley, John Hughes, H. A. Starks and Peter Shaffer. The total membership of the lodge since its institution is over one hundred, while the present membership in good standing is near fifty. The total amount of revenue during the existence as a lodge is near $2,000. Some help has been given to families of brethren, there is some cash on hand, some notes at interest, and the value of regalia and other belongings is over $500.

Chosen Friends.—This order was organized in Bement, April 18, 1881, and at present there are forty-three members. It is a mutual benefit society, in which the members receive one, two or three thousand dollars, owing to the grade they take, one-half of which is paid upon total disability, either from disease or accident, and the whole amount to be paid at death or when the member lives to the age of seventy-five years. Either lady or gentleman can become a member any time between the ages of eighteen and sixty-one. The current expenses are kept up by quarterly dues, and the relief fund is raised on the assessment plan. The organization now numbers, in the United States, from twelve to fifteen thousand persons, and is but three years old. This is the only order in Piatt county, and the first officers who held the highest positions were E. B. Sprague, Past C. C., and T. J. Mitchell, C. C. Those holding the corresponding offices now are M. M. Sprague and G. W. Poole. Dr. Mitchell was the organizer in this county and is deputy supreme counselor.

Knights of Honor.—This lodge was organized April 11, 1879. There are forty members at present. The order is nine years old in June, is conducted on the assessment plan, and is run much like the order of Chosen Friends, except it does not receive lady members. The highest officers at present are Dr. Mitchell, past dictator; Robert Fertig, dictator; James A. Klapp, recorder; H. Halderman, treasurer.

Temperance Union.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized at Bement, November 27, 1879, by Frances E. Willard, with twenty-one charter members. At present there are about fifty-seven members. Miss P. A. Duncan is president; Mrs. J. V. Cooper, secretary; Miss Irene Barnes, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Weinstein, treasurer, and Mrs. Peairs, Mrs. Swaney and Mrs. Martin, vice-presidents. Mrs. Pettit is local editress. A juvenile temperance society was organized in Bement about a year ago.

IVESDALE.

About the time the Great Western railroad was built, or soon after, a switch was made at the present Ivesdale and the station was named Norria for one of the owners of the road. But when Mr. Chapin, general superintendent of the railroad, and one of the men most interested in the station, died, the town was nipped in the bud. After a time the name was changed to Ivesdale, in honor, it is supposed, to Mr. Ives, of Providence, Rhode Island, who owned land in the vicinity. The town was laid off about 1867 on land owned by Messrs. King, Harbinson and Chapin. After about two years an addition was made by S. K. Donovan.

The business part of the place lies in Champaign county, but some forty acres of land owned by W. H. Johnson in Piatt county was incorporated in 1870 or 1871. The school district extends into Piatt county. The first school was taught in 1863 by Miss L. White in a log house.

The post-office was established in 1864, and W. H. Johnson was made postmaster. He retained his position as such with little interruption until 1881, when Mr. Charles Groves became postmaster.

The town contains eight or ten business houses and three churches, Catholic, Methodist and Lutheran. There are about three hundred inhabitants. Mr. Patrick Gallavan is one of the oldest settlers in the vicinity, and W. H. Johnson has been identified with the town almost through its entire existence.

Ivesdale is a good shipping point, and has great need of a flour-mill and elevator.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MR. JOSEPH F. ALVORD, Bement, is of English and German descent. His parents were natives of Massachusetts, and lived and died in their native state. His father died in 1825, but his mother's death did not occur until after Mr. Alvord went west. Mr. Alvord settled in Ohio in 1853, and in 1855 moved to Piatt county, and located on what is known now as the Kesner estate. He lived there in a log house, and boarded the men who built the first house in Bement. The lumber for this first house was hauled from Champaign, and Mr. Alvord helped to do the hauling. On the 6th of November, 1835, Mr. Alvord was united in marriage to Marietta Clapp. Of their children, Joseph C. was killed in 1862, in the late war. Harrison M. has been twice married, and is living in Ohio. Oscar L. died in the army in 1862. George B. married Eunice Upton, has four children, and lived for several years in Kansas. Wilbur C. married Emma Clark, and lives in Bement. Albert F. is now in New Mexico or Arizona. Louis H. was united in marriage to Ella Williams, and is living in Bement.

MR. JOSEPH BODMAN was born September 20, 1819, in Williamsburg, Hampshire county, Massachusetts. His parents were born in the same state, and their ancestors were among the early settlers of that state. Their name first appeared in 1644 on the records of the old South church in Boston. After obtaining such education as he could in a country school, he served a regular apprenticeship in a country store. After he was twenty-one years old he began traveling, both in his own and in other states. He spent a good deal of time in Ohio, but still retained his residence in his native state, and such continued to be his home until he came to Piatt county, in the spring of 1855. He first visited the county, however, in 1853. He entered land for himself and brother, returned east, and then came back for the purpose of getting a station on or near the land, and succeeded in securing the location of what is now Bement. He owns a farm of some 1,400 acres adjoining Bement. It is all under cultivation, has fine farm houses on it, and is inclosed by ten or twelve miles of hedge and fence. Mr. Bodman was one of the charter members of the Bement Masonic lodge, and was the first high priest. We cannot give Mr. Bodman too much credit for the interest he has shown, throughout his residence here, in the town of Bement.

MR. LUTHER BODMAN entered his land in Bement township about 1856, and owns 1,240 acres, all in one tract. It was first entered in partnership with Louis Bodman, but afterward divided. He has put all the improvements on his farm, having put up nine dwelling-houses for laborers. He raises each year from four to five hundred acres of broom-corn, and it is probably the best equipped broom-corn farm in the state, the brick mill alone costing $4,500 or $4,600. The water is pumped by engines into tanks and then into feed lots by pipes. Much money has been expended to place it in its present excellent condition. The broom-corn is cut and cured there, and sent east for manufacture. There are five groves on the farm, from three to five acres in each, and twenty-five miles of osage orange hedge. A great amount of ditching, both open and tiling, has been done. All the land is under cultivation, and under the supervision of one person.

MR. FRANCIS E. BRYANT, banker, Bement, was born in Nelson, New Hampshire, February 3, 1818. His parents were natives of Massachusetts, but moved to New Hampshire in 1815. His grandfather Bryant was in the battle of Bunker Hill, and received a pension for his services there during the rest of his life. Mr. F. E. Bryant has the pocket-book his grandfather carried at the battle of Bunker Hill, also a continental bill which he received for services in this battle. Upon our questioning if he was related to Wm. C. Bryant, the poet, he replied that his father was a cousin to Wm. C. Bryant, and that another cousin, S. F. Smith, is the author of the poem "America." Mr. Bryant's parents moved to Ohio in 1833. His father was a farmer, and his mother, in an early day, taught school. Mr. Bryant was once prepared for college, but owing to a change in arrangements he studied surveying, and on June 15, 1837, he started to Schuyler county, Illinois, where he followed the compass for six years. He remained nineteen years in Schuyler county, and while there, on July 4, 1840, he was united in marriage to Sarah E. Briscoe, a daughter of Col. Geo. H. Briscoe, a soldier of the war of 1812, and formerly a resident of Mercer county, Kentucky. Thinking that he would have a better chance for advancement at Bement than where he was living, he moved to that place July 26, 1856, and began buying grain and selling lumber and salt. He opened the first merchandise store of the place May 18, 1857. From then until the present time he has been an energetic business man of the place; indeed he has been one of the principal business men of Bement, and has done a great deal for the advancement of the town. He has now been in the banking business for ten years. Mr. Bryant was elected county surveyor in Schuyler county in 1839, and served four years. In 1852 he represented that county in the eighteenth general assembly. He was also elected, in 1872, member of the twenty-eighth general assembly, from the counties of Piatt and Champaign. He took an active part in the organization of the Masonic lodge of Bement, and was appointed by the grand lodge its first master, serving as such for three years. Mr. Bryant has traveled somewhat, both in this country and in the old world. He spent the summer of 1878 in Europe. He owns six stores, the bank building, an elevator, several offices and twelve improved lots, in addition to other property. In 1882 he erected an elegant cottage, one of the finest in the county: No expense has been spared in making it one of the most complete homes in the west. Mr. and Mrs. Bryant have had six children, only one of whom, Mrs. Bruce Sprague, is living. Mollie died at the age of seventeen. Two grandchildren, Eddie and Frank, are here to bring joy and gladness to the old age of Mr. and Mrs. Bryant.

“From youth to age this wedded pair
 Have journeyed on together —
 Not always gentle was the wind,
 Nor always bland the weather;
 Yet few and light have been their cares,
 And light and few their crosses,
 And God has shown his pitying face
 Amid their griefs and losses.
 Oh, sore the travel and the toil
 To reach the roseate present,
 Had no affection cheered the way
 And made the journey pleasant.
 What if the cheek has lost its bloom,
 The eye its olden lustre?
 What if the locks are thin and blanched
 Which on the temples cluster?

Still hope is fresh and hearts are young,
 And love is unabated,
 And men and angels hail to-day
 The married and the mated.

The loveliest thing on earth is love,
 The loveliest and the purest ;
 The dearest thing on earth is love,
 The dearest and the surest ;
 And not alone is heavenly sweet
 The honey of its kisses :
 The very tears of love are sweet,
 Its very pangs are blisses ;
 And they who love with love the best,
 The fondest and the strongest —
 Love with the loveliest love of all —
 Are they who love the longest.

Ah ! love's dear veterans well deserve
 Our greetings and our praises,
 Since where we looked for Winter's snows
 They point to Spring's sweet daisies ;
 Since when the sea is smooth and fair,
 Or black the tide is flowing,
 Through all the voyage of the years
 They keep their fond hearts glowing ;
 Since, though the frame may show the trace
 Of many a blight and fever,
 The teeming vineyards of the soul
 Are fresh and green as ever ;
 Since, through the long, sweet married days
 Their faith and fervor proving,
 They make a noble thing of life,
 A Godlike thing of loving.

Oh, happy, true and honored pair !
 Oh, ever leal and loyal !
 We pay you willing court to-day,
 For love has made you royal !
 All gentle thoughts and hopes are yours,
 All wishes, sweet and tender —
 What richer tributes can we bring,
 What worthier homage render ?
 God's cherubs still your steps attend,
 His peace your fond hearts strengthen,
 As o'er the sky above your heads
 The evening shadows lengthen ;
 And when the night comes on, at last,
 And brings its welcome slumber,

Sweet angels from the wondrous host
 Which none may name or number,
 Shall lead your still united souls
 Through shining arch and portal,
 To gardens fair and pastures green,
 Where love shall be immortal!"

In 1831 he was married to Mary Stanton, of Salisbury, Connecticut, and in 1839, with his wife and family of four children, moved from Connecticut to Waverly, Morgan county, Illinois. For the benefit of the curious whom they might meet on their way, on one side of the wagon was printed "From Connecticut," while on the other side was "To Illinois." This, however, seemed to only partially satisfy the people, for through whatever section of the country they passed they were the recipients of innumerable messages to brothers, sisters, sons and daughters in Illinois. These innocent message-senders believed, seemingly, that all the inhabitants of Illinois were acquainted and neighbors. About 1855 Mr. Hopkins moved from Greene county, Illinois, to a farm about one and one-half miles from Bement, which place he improved. It is now owned by Mr. Elihu Fisher. Upon his arriving at Bement he found but about three buildings in the place. These were two dwelling houses and an office owned by Mr. Joseph Bodman. There were but two women in the town, and one of these was nicknamed "Curly," because of the abundance of her curling locks. After remaining in the vicinity of Bement for over two years Mr. Hopkins moved to Christian county, where he remained for about four years, and then returned to Bement for the purpose of opening a grocery and provision store. He estimates that during the fourth year he was in this business he sold $70,000 worth of goods. After remaining in this business about sixteen years he moved again. He was almost the only officer on the staff who could talk French, and Gen. Lafayette pronounced him the best French scholar he met in America. HORTENSE.

IN MEMORIAM.

There's a sadness and pain in our lives this dark day,
 And our hearts have a sorrow that goes not away;
 There's a hush of low voices and silence of feet
 In the house, in the door yard and along the street;
 For Hortense, our dear one, is now gone from our sight.
 All the sunshine seems gone, all is dark as the night;
 So lovely and so pure was her life, that from birth
 To her death she appeared as an "angel on earth."

A soul that we knew had been true to its aim,
 And a hand reached to one or to all just the same;
 A name which was spotless, and forgotten by none—
 That dwelt in our hearts, and affection had won.
 Ah! Hortense, our sweet friend, has gone to her rest,
 And her dear hands lie bloodless and chill on her breast;
 But her name in remembrance we'll cherish for aye,
 And to us a beacon light 'twill be for alway.

Though this shadow has come from the Valley of Death,
 And in grief we must shed bitter tears, let each breath
 Be a prayer in thanksgiving to God for the dear
 And sweet friend who to our lives bro't peace and good cheer.
 Dear Hortense is now gone, but all of us can say,
 "We are better for her having lived." From to-day
 With her bright example before us, we will try
 To so live that we'll meet her in the by and by.

A great many of the townspeople came in (about two hundred and fifty) and gave the old people a surprise. Their friends from a distance got an inkling of the surprise, and letters of congratulation were sent, and, as they expressed it, "We never had anything to do us so much good." The following is a poem by the Rev. Mr. Thompson, written for the occasion :

GOLDEN WEDDING.

George, well do you remember,
 It's as fresh as if to-night,
 How fifty years ago this eve
 You stood and sealed your plight
 With her by your side, and vowed "To love her and protect,"
 And so confessed to God and man
 Mary your elect.

Mary, what a wife you've made
 For George here, your lord;
 A faithful helpmeet you have been
 In every work and word.
 When heaviest laid affliction's hand,
 And darkest seemed the cloud,
 His sorrow you have nobly shared,
 And 'neath his burdens bowed.

Yes, sainted pair, we reverence you,
 And with one common voice
 Ascribe to you all honor,
 And inwardly rejoice
 "That you are spared by Him who rules
 With glory and with might,"
 To celebrate as rare a feast—
 Your Golden Wedding Night.

Your lives are in their sunset now,
 And lovely is the scene;
 For over all your noble past
 Is cast a golden sheen.
 Its glory shall increase until
 Your sun shall shine no more;
 And then a little twilight,
 And then the golden shore.

And, oh, the rapturous glories
 Of that city paved with gold!
 Where, hand in hand, the glorified
 Shall walk, and ne'er grow old.
 There'll be no rocky steps to climb,
 No snare or stumbling stone;
 But robed in white, with golden harps,
 We'll worship at God's throne.

When George and Mary,
 Once more a groom and bride,
 We know altho' your vigor's gone
 You are still each other's pride.
 And please hear the sentiment
 To-night of every heart:—
 "What God has joined together, Let no man put apart."

He thinks he made and finished the first wagon in the county in 1859. After following this business some fifteen years, he began dealing in implements, at which he still continues. This land is all improved and in good farming condition. Eight dwelling-houses and barns are on the land owned by the Scotts. The houses are better than tenants usually have. An elevator belonging to Mr. Scott burned in 1868, and was at that time the largest between Springfield and Danville. About $4,000 worth of grain was destroyed. A nice residence in Bement, belonging to Mrs. Isaac Scott, burned in 1881. Mr. Scott passed through in 1836, stopping at Mr. Sadorus', then taking dinner at Mr. Piatt's, and went on to Springfield, where he entered 2,000 acres of land for his father, which proved to be a very profitable investment. Mr. Scott's uncle was lieutenant under Gen. Wayne. Mr. Isaac Scott was married in 1838, to Susan B. Mitchell, a native of Philadelphia, and they have had seven children, four of whom are living. M. Thompson married Kate Williams, and has five children living, Isaac W., Margaret, Matthew T., John W. and Henry S.; Mary M. makes her home here; Joseph M., after living here seven years and improving a farm, moved to Kentucky in 1875. He married Mary Campbell and has three children. Miss Sue B. lives at home, and she and her sister Mary are very active members in the Presbyterian church here. They graduated at Lexington and attended Sayre Female Institution. Mr. Mat. Scott, Isaac's brother, formerly owned considerable land in Piatt county, some of which he improved, and entered in this and adjoining counties some 20,000 acres. He is now in business in the coal mines in Bloomington. Mr. Joseph Scott, another brother of Isaac's, owned some 1,280 acres of land in this county; lived here seven years, dying in 1865.

MR. F. H. SMITH, nurseryman, Bement, is a native of Winchester, Cheshire county, New Hampshire; moved from there to Winchester, Scott county, Illinois, in 1856, and from there to Bement in 1859. He began farming near town, but his principal business has been his present occupation, though from 1861 to 1864 was keeping hotel. He owns his residence and two lots. Mr. Smith was married in November 1856, in Williamstown, Vermont, to Sarah A. Bruce. They had one daughter, Etta May. Mr. Smith has held the office of assessor of Bement township, and is a member of the Knights of Honor. His father was in the war of 1812.

MR. MARO SPRAGUE, furniture dealer, Bement, is a native of Coshocton county, Ohio, and moved from there to Illinois in 1871, locating in Bement. For a number of years he was in the grocery business with his brother, and has only been in the furniture business a year. He owns a house and three acres and business house and lot. Mr. Sprague was married in Ohio in 1860, to Elizabeth McKee, who died, leaving three daughters, Nellie, Lucy (a graduate of the Bement high school and a teacher in the county) and Lizzie. He was again married in 1875, to S. Maggie Beall, of Ohio. They both belong to the society of "Chosen Friends." Mr. Sprague's father was born in 1796, in New Hampshire, and made his home in Piatt county for several years. He died January 6, 1877.

He went into the grocery business in 1877, and carries the heaviest stock of groceries in the county, doing a strictly cash business, and has been successful right along. His present grocery building consisting of two rooms, basement and public hall, was completed in 1880. Mr. George Stadler is at present supervisor of Bement township, and was a member of the town board for four years, and also township clerk for several years. He is a member

Mr. Stadler's father was a regular soldier in Germany for nine years, and was in the late war here. He came to America in 1848 with Siegel and Schurtz, and organized and was captain of the 12th Ind. bat. He resigned when lieutenant-col. on account of sickness.

MR. AMOS STOUT, farmer, Bement, was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, and moved from there to Piatt county about 1855. He first settled at Monticello, remained there a time, then went on to a farm.

In 1866 he was married to Catherine Allman, and has had four children, Edmund S., John W., James C. and Mary Catharine. Mr. Stout went to the army from Piatt county in 1862, in Co. E of the 107th reg. He stayed three years and was in the battles of Franklin, Nashville, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach-tree Creek, Resaca and the Georgia campaign. He was wounded by a bullet in the head at Kenesaw Mountain, and has not received a pension. He owns a farm of 120 acres, upon which has put most of improvements; built barn, planted sixty fruit trees, one mile and a half of hedge, and has it well tiled and all under cultivation.

DR. EDWARD SWANEY, is a retired physician who came to Bement in May 1867. He owns quite a good deal of property in the place, and was married May 10, 1860, to Miss Emily Camp. He is a native of Maryland, and obtained his medical education in Hanover, Ohio. He has not practiced medicine since coming to Bement. He owns a good deal of real estate in the town, and is one of its most worthy citizens.

MR. G. W. SHOW, baker, Bement, is a native of Pennsylvania, and moved from there to La Salle county, Illinois, about 1862; thence to Macon county, and then to Piatt county in 1877, when he immediately opened a bakery and confectionery store at Bement, which is the only bakery in town. He is doing a thriving business and gives good satisfaction. He owns a portion of his business house. Mr. Show was married in 1872, to Mattie Mavity, a native of Illinois. Greer, and has had six children: Ebon, who married Susie Plikard, and has one child; William, George, Eliza Ann, Martha D. and Mary E.

MR. CHARLES F. TENNEY, hardware merchant, Bement, is a native of New Hampshire, his parents' native state. He is the youngest of a family of eight children. His brother Ralph, now in Chicago, was formerly a resident of Piatt county. Mr. Tenney moved from New Hampshire to Henry county, Illinois, when he was twenty-one years old. He was a school teacher previous to coming west. He moved to Decatur in 1857 or 1858, and then 1859 he settled in Bement. Until 1866 he was in the dry goods business. In 1867 or 1868 he went into partnership with Mr. William Camp in the hardware business.

Mr. Tenney has belonged to the Masonic order since 1862, and is one of the Knights Templar of the Decatur commandery. He has held several town offices, and is now a member of the state legislature. Mr. Tenney owns one of the finest residences in Bement. The arrangement of the house and the plan of the surroundings show a cultivated taste in the owners.

MR. ROYAL THOMAS, hotelkeeper, Bement, is a native of Massachusetts. From there he moved to Pennsylvania, where he lived five years, and then came to Bement in 1869, having previously been there in 1867. It was owing to Mr. Wing's influence he located here. His grandfathers on both sides were in the revolutionary war. He came of a long-lived family. His great-uncle lived to be one hundred and twelve years old, and his great-grandmother walked half a mile to church after one hundred years old and died at one hundred and six. Of his great-grandmother's family of twelve children, the eldest lived to be one hundred and twelve and the youngest one hundred and six. His grandfather died at ninety-six and his father at eighty-six. Mr. Royal Thomas has seen many changes in the country since he first came. The land is now well drained and the trees increased in number. The first summer he was here he saw about five thousand cattle herding where now are fruitful farms. Mr. Thomas, in 1871, began keeping the hotel, which is the largest in the place, and has had it since. Mr. Wharton sold the building to Mr. Sparks, who sold to Mr. Thomas. Besides the hotel and three lots he owns fifteen other lots in Bement. He was police magistrate for three years, justice of the peace for two years and member of the school board for four years. Mr. Thomas was married in 1848, to Adeline M. Mayhew, and has three children living: Frank J., who is the wife of Mr. Frank Jones and has two children, Royal and Charles; Mary and Lucius W. are the names of the other children.

He owns his residence and three lots. Mr. Thompson was married in 1855, to Alice A. Ramsey, a native of Pennsylvania, and they have had nine children, five of whom are living, Mollie R., Anna M., J. Formey, George M. and Carl R. Mr. Thompson went to the war from Pennsylvania in Co. G, 143d Penn. Vols., remaining two years. The principal battle was that of the Wilderness, beginning on the Rapidan and ending with Spottsylvania Court House. He was wounded at the latter place.

DR. N. N. VANCE, Bement, is a native of Kentucky, moved to Indianapolis, Indiana, about 1846, and then to Bement in October, 1868, and began practicing medicine at once. When he first came here he practiced in Champaign, Douglas, Moultrie and Piatt counties; now is in a smaller territory but has larger practice. One year he was located in Cerro Gordo. Mr. Vance gained his medical education at medical college of Ohio, in Cincinnati, graduating from there in 1868. He was for a time in partnership with Dr. Leal, who died in California. Mr. Vance is a member of the lodge and chapter and master of the blue lodge of Bement. He is surgeon of the Wabash Railroad Company. He went to the army in Co. A, of the "Bloody" 132d reg. Ind., and has, in common with others, a certificate of thanks signed by Abraham Lincoln. Was out three months, enlisting June, 1864. Mr. Vance was married December 24, 1872, to Fannie Routh, and has four children, Noble, Willie, Harvey and James St. Clair.

MR. D. VAUGHAN, lumber merchant, Bement, is of English and German descent and a native of New Jersey, from which state he moved to Illinois in 1863. After locating in Bement for three months he went to Decatur, where he remained for about three years. He then returned to Bement about 1867, where he was in a bank for three years. In 1870 he and Mr. J. C. Evans went into partnership in the lumber business. Mr. Vaughn owns his residence and four lots in Bement. He has held several offices since living at this place. He was married in 1867, to Emma J. Reynolds, a native of New York. They have one daughter, Lily F.

MR. L. B. WING, though never a resident proper of Piatt county, has been identified with the history and interest of Bement township since its settlement. He was born in 1822, at Wilmington, Vermont, was educated at Williston Seminary, Massachusetts. For five years he was clerk of a steamboat on Lake Erie, and finally settled in Newark, Ohio, where he still lives. Late in the year of 1853 Mr. Joseph Bodman and Mr. Wing came to Monticello, making their home with Mr. Barney Winchester; surveyed and located their lands they now own in Bement township. In 1854 Hunt and Carter, engineers and financial agents of the Wabash railroad, bought thirty-three acres in Sec. 19, T. 17, R. 6, of Mr. Wing for $1, and upon this tract was located the railroad grounds and the principal business houses of this town. In 1858 Mr. William Rea and Mr. Wing gave to the village of Bement the square upon which the public school buildings were erected. Mr. Wing has for many years maintained on his farm near Bement a valuable herd of Short-horn cattle, and has introduced improved breeds of other domestic animals. In general, Mr. Wing has manifested a willingness to assist in whatever tends to the improvement of the town and neighborhood.

MR. C. T. Webster, grocer, Bement, is a native of New York. He located in Bement in 1866, and opened a grocery store, which business he has remained in since. In 1880 his brother-in-law, Mr. Klapp, went into business with him. Mr. Webster owns two residences and two and one-half lots in Bement. He was united in marriage to Miss Eugenia S. Klapp, and has three children, Ida E., Eugene K. and Charles M. In 1862 he went to the army from Michigan in Co. E of the 20th Mich. Inf., and remained until 1865. In all, he was in twenty-three engagements, the principal of which are South Mountain, Antietam and the Wilderness. Near Petersburg he was buried alive by the explosion of a sixty-four pound mortar shell, during an engagement. He was under the ground nearly half an hour before the boys could release him. He escaped with but an injury to his back, while those who stood at his side at the time of the explosion were severely injured. He was taken prisoner while near the same fort, but succeeded in escaping ere long. Mr. Webster's father and mother moved from New York to Missouri, where his mother died and his father married again. His father was killed by being thrown from a horse. His mother is now the wife of Mr. Simon Shonkwiler. Mr. Webster first came to Illinois about 1848, but after remaining a few years, went to New York, where his uncle gave him his education.

MR. EDWARD WEINSTEIN, Bement, is a native of New York, but was raised in Kentucky, and came to Illinois about 1857. The second year of the war he went south, engaged in cotton raising, and, returning to Illinois about 1868, located in Bement. For two years he was in a clothing store in Bement, then, in 1870, began traveling for a clothing house in Cincinnati. He owns his residence and two lots. Mr. Weinstein belongs to several societies, the Odd-Fellows, Masonic Lodge and Knights of Honor. He was instrumental in organizing the Odd-Fellows' encampment, which was instituted about 1869. Mr. Weinstein was married in 1864, to Mary E. Fulghum, of Richmond, Wayne county, Indiana, and has three children, Lena M., Romeo A. and Walter P. Mrs. Fulghum lives with her daughter.

MR. PATRICK WELCH, farmer, Bement, came from Ireland to America in 1839, and in 1873 located in Piatt county. He was married in 1847, to Eliza McElroy, and has five sons, Peter, who married Miss Morgan; John, who married Miss Slaven; Nicholas, Frank and Bernard.

MRS. CAROLINE YOST, Bement, is a native of Belmont county, Ohio. She moved from Monroe county, where she married Mr. Aaron Yost, to Bement, April 29, 1856. Mrs. Yost's father, Jacob L. Colvig, was born and educated in Paris, France. We saw an ear-ring he wore while a student in Paris. After gaining his education he learned a trade and after coming to America worked as a cabinet maker. He made furniture for the house of George Washington's brother. Mrs. Yost's father and mother moved to Ohio, where they lived until their death, which occurred within seven days of each other. Mrs. Yost's sister, Josephine Grabonski, after living in this county for a time, died, and is buried in the Bement cemetery. Another sister, Mrs. Peter Shaffer, moved to Reno county, Kansas, in 1872. Mr. Aaron Yost died in 1871, leaving four children. Robert, their eldest son, when ten years old, was killed by a wagon running over him. Ezra Yost is a carpenter in Bement, and owns the house and two lots where Mrs. Yost now lives. Alice is the wife of F. M. Bell, has one son, Herbert, and lives on the farm near Bement, where Mr. and Mrs. Yost lived a number of years. Mary and John Yost are living with their mother. Mrs. Yost's nephew, Clark Colvig, made his home with her, and was one of the first young men to come to Bement. He went to the army in the 21st Ill. Inf., and was captured at Chickamauga, and was taken to Richmond and to Danville. From the latter place he, with others, escaped by tunneling under the ground 100 feet. He traveled until his feet were sore and bleeding. Through a negro's influence he found shelter in a cave, where he remained until he was able to continue his journey and rejoin his regiment. Mr. Colvig is now mining in Globe City, Arizona.

CHAPTER XV.

UNITY TOWNSHIP.

THIS township is one of the earliest settled townships of the county. In size it is equal to Bement and Monticello townships. It lies directly south of the former, and the surface of the land is very similar to the same. Douglas county borders on the east, Moultrie county on the south, while Cerro Gordo township forms the western boundary line.

The surface of the land is level, and for a number of years a great portion of it was covered with swamps, but since the settlements began to be scattered throughout the township sufficient ditching has been done to make the greater portion of the township tillable.

The main slope of the ground, imperceptible though it may be, is toward the east and southeast, and the greater portion of the land is drained into the lake fork of the Okaw. This stream strikes this township about three miles west of the northeast corner of the township, flows southeast and leaves the township almost exactly at its southeast corner. This stream has a shallow bed, flows very slowly, and well deserves its name of Lake Fork. Quite a good belt of timber follows the course of this stream, which breaks the monotony of the prairie land.

Relics of a former race are found in this township. On the banks of Lake Fork and on Mr. Livengood's place there are some mounds at least three feet in height and two rods in circumference. Trees eight inches in diameter grow on these mounds, human bones have been found in them, and stone axes and arrow-points have been found in their vicinity.

Two railroads cross Unity township. What was originally known as the Chicago & Paducah road strikes the northern boundary line about two miles from the northwestern corner of the township, runs south nearly five miles, and then bends a little to the southwest, leaving the township about one mile east of the southwest corner of the township. This road has two stations, Voorhies and Hammond, which is at the intersection of this road with the Indianapolis, Decatur & Springfield railroad. The Indianapolis, Decatur & Springfield road, which has lately become a part of the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Wabash system of roads, crosses the southern part of the township from east to west, and just half a mile from the southern township line. There are three stations on this road, Hammond, Pierson and Atwood, the latter lying only partly within the limits of Piatt county.

Early settlements.—The Monroes, Shonkwilers, Harshbargers, Moores, and Mr. James Utterback, were the first settlers in Unity township. These people settled on the Lake Fork during the years 1836 and 1837, and part of them still live there. Other old settlers were the Quicks, Crains and Gregorys. Most of these people, or their descendants, have successfully built up homes in this township, and in every way are well-to-do people. From our transient contact with the people in this section of the township we think that they probably retain more of the good old ways of pioneer life than any other people in the county. We found here several of the old substantial two-story hewn log-houses, with their great fireplaces. We also found the second brick house of the county. We observed a great deal of the good old-time neighborly feeling, and we found characteristic pioneer hospitality. There was not a great deal of ceremony about this hospitality, but with it all you could not fail to see that you were welcome in every sense of the word. We also found here one of the oldest church organizations of the county.

Unity township has had a "neighborhood detective society," which has been in existence over twenty years. Some twenty or thirty of the best citizens comprise the organization, and much good has resulted in the way of keeping order in the neighborhood.

Harshbarger church.—This church, of the Christian denomination, was organized in 1842, and for a time the society met at houses and schoolhouses, until 1858, when the present church building, the second in the county, was erected on land donated by Mr. Harshbarger. The first man who preached on Lake Fork was Nicholas Prior, and the first sermon was preached in 1837, to about ten persons, comprising the entire neighborhood of men, women and children. John Collins was the next preacher, Thomas Holden the next, and then Thomas Welch came. After that Father Wilkins dedicated the church building just referred to. The Christian conference has been held six times in Unity township, four of which times it was held in the Harshbarger church.

First birth, death, marriage, etc.—Mr. Daniel Harshbarger was the first person to make a profession of religion and the first person who was baptised on Lake Fork.

Mrs. Gamaliel Gregory was the first person born in Unity township.

Harrison and Jessie Monroe were the first who died within the limits of Unity township. They were buried on the bank of Lake Fork.

Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Harshbarger's twins were probably the first who were buried in the Harshbarger cemetery. This cemetery, which contains two or three acres of ground, was deeded to the public by Mr. Daniel Harshbarger.

Mr. Joseph Taylor and Sarah Monroe (now Mrs. Thomas Goodson) were married in 1838, on the site of Richard Monroe's present home, and were the first couple married in the township.

Mr. Daniel Harshbarger was the first justice of the peace of Unity township, and Jonathan Wildman the first school-teacher.

Coffins for the dead were made by the neighbors of the deceased. Mr. Joseph Moore has an old drawing knife which he used many a time to make coffins.

Mr. Moore says that it was over twelve years after the first settlements were made in the township before there were any bridges over the Lake Fork or before there was a blacksmithshop in the neighborhood. Before blacksmithing was done it was customary to put buckskin boots on the horses for them to slide over the ice with.

Mackville.—There used to be a beaver dam near where Mackville now is. There was also another land-mark, an eagle's nest; and it was not uncommon to hear the question, "How far are you from the eagle's nest?"

Mackville was started by a Mr. McNutt (according to "Buckskin Joe" Moore), who rented a house that stood on Mr. Moore's present field, and used it for two years as a store. He then bought three acres of land of Nathaniel Shonkwiler where Mackville now is, and put up a storehouse now owned by Mr. James Sampson. We suppose that the village was probably first called Mack's village, which was soon shortened to Mackville. According to Mr. J. Sampson, Mr. McNutt kept the first store in the present Mackville, in a house which stood on the west side of Lake Fork, and which is still standing. The first school in the district was taught in a log house on the place now owned by the widow Shonkwiler, and Mr. James Lewis taught the first school in the present school-house of Mackville in 1858. The first church was held in the school-house in 1858.

The church building was dedicated in 1872. Mr. Riley and Col. Buckner were probably the first preachers in Mackville.

Dr. Mitchell was the first regular physician of Mackville, and he was followed by Dr. Jas. Lewis, Dr. Lucas and Dr. Marshall.

At the time of our visit to Mackville there were over twenty-five houses, seven or eight business houses, a Methodist church building and a school-house. We understand, however, that a number of these buildings have been moved to Atwood, the nearest railway station.

Atwood.—Mr. Joseph Moore reports that Mr. Christopher Mossbarger was the first resident where Atwood now is. He owned a horse mill at this place, and did good work in the way of grinding grain for the neighborhood. He and Mr. Geo. Heath once laid off a town, and upon Mr. Moor's laughing and asking why he did so, Mr. Mossbarger solemnly answered, "Why, people come here. Railroads come here." The neighbors, however, thought such was nonsense. After a town was thus laid off, it did go back for a number of years, and trees grew up again. Mr. Andrew Richey bought out the heirs of Mr. Mossbarger, and still lives there.

Atwood was laid out in 1873 on land then owned by Geo. Noland and Harvey Otter. In 1881 an addition was made to the town and called Randal's addition. At the time of the laying out of the town, however, this land was owned by Mr. Levi Budd.

It was related to us that the name was given to the town by lawyer McCoutry, and that originally in speaking of the town it was customary to say "at the wood." Hence the name.

Atwood is only partly within the limits of Piatt county, a portion of it lying in Douglas county. The first house in the place was a store building, erected in August 1873, by Rich. Helton and David Barrett. They each moved a dwelling-house over from Mackville, and these became the first residences of the town. The first school was sustained by subscription. As Atwood is in the Mackville district it has no school-building of its own.

L. C. Taylor was the first postmaster of Atwood; Dr. Bennerfield, now Ivesdale, the first physician; Jno. Lucas put up the first drug store, and Joseph Moore kept the first hotel.

Freddie A. Richey was the name of the first child born in Atwood, and Clarence B. Snodgrass, who died December 14, 1873, the name of the first person who died there.

The members of the Christian church erected a church building, which was dedicated August 15, 1880, by Rev. J. Phillips, of Graysville, Indiana, and Rev. W. H. Orr, of Philo, Illinois.

Atwood of to-day is growing rapidly. There are from fifteen to twenty business firms in the place, and new buildings are continually being erected. Over thirty new buildings were put up last year. The town contains nearly 500 inhabitants, which is twice what it contained five years ago.

Atwood is in the midst of a good territory, has good people in it, and we predict that it will continue to make rapid advancement.

Royal Templars of Temperance.—The Atwood Council of Royal Templars of Temperance was instituted July 1, 1879, by Mr. Martin J. Watson, grand lecturer, in Drew's Hall, on the Piatt county side of the county line. The following are the names of the charter members: J. S. Marshall, Albert C. Lucas, Theodore J. Richey, Joseph W. Merritt, W. R. Marshall, J. C. Mathes, W. P. Myers, W. H. Mosbarger, Adam Starr, Mrs. R. J. Mathes, Mrs. Hannah M. Mosbarger, G. W. Snodgrass. The first officers were A. C. Lucas, select councilor; I. J. Richey, vice-councilor; J. W. Merritt, past councilor; J. C. Mathes, chaplain; W. R. Marshall, secretary; J. S. Marshall, treasurer; W. P. Myers, herald; A. Starr, sentinel; G. W. Snodgrass, guard; W. H. Mossbarger, financial secretary.

Mutual Aid Association.—The Indiana Mutual Aid Association of Terre Haute, Indiana, has several agents in Piatt county. It is formed on the same plan as the Royal Legal Friendly Society of England, and is similar to the Masonic, Odd-Fellows and other mutual associations.

The object of the association is to furnish protection to all. All beneficiaries must be of kin to the members. There are no annual dues and no premiums. Assessments are made upon the loss of members, according to the class to which each member belongs. The membership in this county amounts to quite a number, and Mr. T. A. Wilson and Mr. Ritchie, of Atwood, and W. J. Porter, of Monticello, are agents.

Hammond.—It has not been a great many years since there was scarcely a trace of inhabitants in the vicinity of Hammond. A few people ventured to locate in prairie round about, and they had a trial to get a start in such place. The people who lived near the timber wanted the prairie land for grazing purpose, and they took no pains to keep their stock at home. One of the early settlers told us that for the first few years after he located on the prairie, he used to get up night after night to ride around his place to see if any stray stock was on it. However, such trials were finally overcome and comfortable homesteads are dotted all over the prairie land.

Hammond is located at the crossing of the railroads originally known as the Indianapolis, Decatur & Springfield, and the Chicago & Paducah. The town was laid out in July, 1873, by C. D. Moore, assisted by C. H. Love. The place was first called Shumway, but the name was soon changed to Unity, and the people still being dissatisfied, the owners of the town site, Warren and Powers, of Decatur, selected the name of Hammond, in honor of the president of the Indianapolis, Decatur & Springfield railroad.

The very first building put up in what is now Hammond was a grain office erected by Mr. Sanford, of Bement. Olonzo Newton put up and kept the first store building in the town. He also erected the first residence, which is now a part of the hotel kept by Mr. Jno. Tenbrooke, and his wife cooked the first meal of victuals eaten in the town. Mr. J. R. Wortham opened a mercantile house in 1873, and he is still in business in the town. J. M. Baldwin opened the second general merchandise store. M. D. Cook, who was the first postmaster, had the first drug store. W. R. Evans, at present a grain merchant, had the first hardware store. George Ragland was the first blacksmith and Dr. Abram the first physician of the place.

Hammond of to-day contains from fifteen to twenty business firms, over 200 inhabitants, and bids fair to become quite a place. In 1876 the Chicago & Pacific railroad built an elevator with the capacity for storing 3,000 bushels of grain. In 1881 Brown & Boyd, of Indianapolis, built a large grain elevator in the town, with a capacity for 35,000 bushels of grain. John S. Metcalf was the superintendent and J. R. McCormick the foreman of this building. The town is fast becoming quite a grain center. There have been as high as 200,000 bushels of grain cribbed there at one time.

Hammond had the first tow-mill that we have heard of in the county. It was begun by G. W. Folkerth, but is now owned by Davis & Finney, of Tuscola, and the Kiser Brothers, of Hammond. Monticello has followed the example set by Hammond, and also has a tow-mill.

Hammond has a very neat and attractive school building, erected in 1882, of which the people are justly proud.

Two church organizations are in existence at the place. The Methodists, who organized in 1876, recently dedicated a new church building. Dr. W. H. H. Adams dedicated this church in 1882. There are over thirty members in this denomination. The Christian church was organized by Elder Culley, of Decatur, in 1877, and though the membership is not large, it is hoped that ere a great while they may be enabled to erect a house of worship.

Good Templars.—While many of the citizens of Hammond belong to lodges in other towns, this is the only local organization in the place. This lodge was organized in December, 1880, by Col. J. D. Long, of Kentucky, and contains over thirty active members. We are glad to find these temperance organizations in various parts of the county. They show that the people are striving for better things; that they are endeavoring to reach a higher plane of existence.

Pierson.—The railroad switch at this place, which is on the Indianapolis, Decatur & Springfield railroad, was laid about 1876, and it was named Pierson probably for the man who owned land in that vicinity. The postoffice was started in 1877, under the name of Dry Ridge, but the name was soon changed to Pierson. Francis F. Flack was the first postmaster, and Mr. Reuben Willey the second.

Nothing was done in 1876 save the laying of the switch and the putting up of one grain office, but in 1877 Mr. Willey put up a grocery store. The town itself was not laid off until May 1881, when C. D. Moore surveyed it on land owned by Mr. W. C. Pierson. The first dwelling-house erected in the town as laid off at that date is one built the same year and in which Chas. W. Weaver resides. Mr. Willey's house, built in 1875, was the first residence erected near the switch. There are now several business houses at the station.

Baptist church.—This church organization has had an existence of about thirteen years, and, as far as we could learn, is the only Baptist church in Piatt county. The first minister who preached after the organization was Rev. Geo. Christ. Nathan Griffen was the minister in 1881. In 1881 a church building was erected in the town of Pierson, which cost $1,000. This building presents a neat appearance, and was the first house erected in the town as laid off. The membership is about seventy-five.

CHAPTER XVI.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MR. J. H. BAKER, a farmer of Unity township, began his earthly existence August 29, 1833, in Coles county, Illinois. His father died about 1830, and his mother married Mr. Tyre Hayes, and about 1849 moved to Piatt county. Mr. Baker's sister Martha married Mr. James Drew, a native of Hamilton county, and who settled on land he now owns just over Piatt county's southern line, in 1839. Mr. Drew has owned some 120 acres in Piatt county. He remembers when there was scarce a house between his place and Monticello. He has furnished some interesting items relating to the settling of the southeastern part of Unity township. Mr. Baker's mother had five children by her last marriage, only one of whom, Eliza Hays, wife of Rich. Hultz, is living. Three of her sons were triplets, all of whom were in the late war. John F. died of small-pox in Missouri. The others returned from the army. Mark died here, and Andrew went to California and died there. Mrs. Hays died about 1859. Mr. J. H. Baker married Sarah Harshbarger, April 12, 1860. Six children have blessed their union, five of whom are living. Florence and husband, Jno. McKinney, live in Douglas county; Daniel Leslie, John Wesley, Barbara Ellen and Cordelia are all at home. Mr. Baker moved onto his present place about 1855. He owns eighty acres, upon which he has put most of the improvements. There was but a log cabin on it when he was married. Now (1881) he is building a fine ten-room frame residence; it has an east front, and will soon be one of the most beautiful residences in all the country about. Mr. Baker has been road commissioner, and formerly belonged to the Masonic lodge.

MR. ISAAC BAKER, a native of Coles county, born 1831, came to Piatt county in 1849. He first lived on Mr. Simon Shonkwiler's place, and next where Mr. Joe. Baker now lives. He married Miss Huldah Quick and moved onto the farm where he now lives. He owns 248 acres, upon which he has planted 160 orchard trees. Mrs. Baker died in 1875, having had six children, five of whom are living, John Franklin, Alice Matilda, Martha, Benjamin L. and Naomi. Mr. Baker has been assessor, collector, road commissioner and school director.

Anna married James Quick, who is a farmer in Bement township; they have one little girl, Maud. Lou, the youngest of Mr. Bryson's family, is at home. Mr. and Mrs. Bryson, with noteworthy pride, make the statement that "all our girls were school teachers." Eva attended school at Decatur, while Anna was a student at the State Normal.

MR. J. A. BRYSON, dealer in farming implements at Hammond, claims Licking county, Ohio, as his birthplace. He came to Unity township in 1855 and has remained in it till the present time. He was married in 1868, to Melissa Wildman, and one child, Della May, has blessed their union. Mr. Bryson went to the army in Co. H of the 107th Ill., and Knoxville, Franklin, and those of the Atlanta campaign, were the principal battles in which he was engaged. He was taken prisoner at Goldsboro, Kentucky, but was paroled the same evening. He relates that Dennis O'Leary, who went from Monticello, was the first man killed in his regiment. O'Leary was shot in a regular battle at Loudon, Tennessee, by one of Longstreet's men, who were dressed in Union uniform. The poor fellow died thinking that he had been shot by a Union soldier, but the mistake was afterward ascertained; a convincing of which was the mark of a bullet and three buck-shot through a tin cup in his haversack.

MR. JOHN BARRITT, hotel keeper in Atwood, is of German and Irish descent and is a native of Kentucky. He moved from there to Coles county, Illinois, and then to Piatt county, in 1856. He has been successful as a farmer and his neighbors testify to his worth and honor as a gentleman. Mr. Joel Blackwell married Clara Metzger, and they with their two children live in Edgar county. Martha E. married Harry Metzger, a farmer in Bement township, and has one child, Jno. Thomas. Mary, the wife of William Anderson, lives near Hammond. The names of the other children are Minerva T., Benjamin, Nancy Ann, Jno. William and Alta Florence. Mr. Blackwell went to the army from Kentucky, and was in the state service. They had to come to Illinois to organize to keep from being pressed into the rebel service. He served about two years.

MR. P. J. BUTLER, a farmer of Unity township, was born in Ireland, and came to America about 1851. He was married about 1876, to Mary J. Ryan. He has planted out some two hundred and fifty trees, and built the house they live in. He went to the army in Co. E, 85th Ohio reg. He was only in skirmishes. His principal work was the guarding of prisoners.

MR. FRANKLIN BROWNING, farmer in Unity township, is of Scotch lineage and is a native of Kentucky. He moved from there to Coles county in 1856, and to Piatt county in 1857. He was married in 1852 to Priscilla Barritt, who died leaving two children, Sarah Margaret, who married Abner Fisher, and lives in Atwood with their three children, James, Jessie and an infant; and John Henry, who married Kate Wren and lives in Douglas county. Mr. Browning was married to Angeline Duvall, in 1863. They have had three children, two of whom, Alvah and Maria, are living. Mrs. Browning thought the prairie a desolate place to live when she first settled there. She was unreconciled to the place for eight years, but after she made a visit home about ten years ago she was content with her prairie home. Mr. Browning bought the present home about 1864, and now owns about forty acres. He has been school director and trustee, and is a member of the Masonic lodge at Mackville.

MR. AZOR BUNYAN (deceased) was a native of England, and came to America,—Ohio—when fourteen years of age. He moved from Ohio to Indiana, where his father died. He went back to Ohio and married Catharine Carpenter, and lived there till 1864, when he moved to Piatt county. He bought the land where his family live upon his coming to the county, and lived there till their house burned in 1873, when he moved to Bement, where he died in 1874. Mrs. Bunyan with her children moved to the farm, and in 1875 built their present frame dwelling of five rooms. Mrs. Bunyan has had ten children, eight of whom are living. Lucinda, the wife of Henry Keller, lives in Kansas. Albert, a soldier in the army, married Caroline Scott and lives in Kansas. Harriet, married Wallace Davy, a carpenter of Michigan. Crain have had five children, Thomas H., Otis, Charles, Virgil and Walter. Mr. Crain went to the army in 1862, in Co. H of the 107th Ill. reg., and remained until 1865. The principal battles in which he engaged were those at Loudon, Knoxville and Atlanta. He was slightly wounded while in Georgia.

MR. FRANK CRAIN, Gainesville, Texas, was united in marriage in 1874 to Mary E. Layson, who died in 1877. He was next married to Lizzie Tutin, of Wisconsin, and in 1877 moved to Texas, where he deals in stock. He has one daughter. Mr. Crain's father improved a 3,700 acre farm in Piatt county, spending the latter years of his life here. Upon coming to the county, however, he was not able to enter forty acres of land.

MR. VOLNEY SNYDER, farmer and carpenter, Pierson, is a native of Ohio, and moved to Piatt county in 1854, coming into the southern part of the county in time to fight prairie fire many a time. He remembers of fighting fire all night once on the Crain farm. Mr. Snyder was united in marriage to Mrs. Cook née Lydia Monroe, who died in 1877, leaving seven children, two of whom were Mr. Snyder's. William H. farms with his father, and Andrew J. is farming in Kansas. Mr. Snyder owns 160 acres of land, upon which he is putting improvements.

James A. Bowls married Lucy Brown, has four children, Chas., Jno., Jas. and a baby, and lives in Unity township. Jno. W. Bowls died in the army. One grandson, Marion W., lives with Mrs. Bowls in Bement.

MR. J. R. CANTRALL, a farmer near Hammond, is a native of Dewitt county, and moved to Piatt county in 1870. His grandfather, Levi Cantrall, was an early settler of Dewitt county, having moved there about fifty years ago. Mr. J. R. Cantrall went to the army in Co. D of the 107th Ill. reg., and was in a hospital, on account of sickness, a good deal of the time. His principal battles were those of Franklin and the siege of Nashville. He considers himself ten years older than he would have been had he not gone to the war. He tells of one man who was known to die in the army from homesickness. Mr. Cantrall married Captain Love's daughter, Jennie, and they live on a place adjoining Mr. Love's. They have had three children, Alva L., Edna E. and Myrta M.

MR. ALFRED CLARK, farmer, was born in 1817, in Kentucky. He is the last of a family of eleven children. His grandfather's posterity, up to the time of the war, numbered 3,500 persons. It would now reach near 10,000. His father was in the war of 1812. Fifty years ago Mr. Clark attended a Sunday school in Kentucky with one hundred children, and out of that number he is one of the five who are still living. He moved from Kentucky to Sangamon county, Illinois, about thirty years ago, and in 1870 moved to Piatt county. He has lived on his present home farm of eighty acres, which he has improved himself, for about eight years. He was married in Kentucky, to Mary E. Chevis, who died leaving two children, Sarah A., the wife of Benj. Upham, county clerk at Jacksonville, and the parent of five children; John H., now in an abstract office at Charleston, and a soldier for five and one-half years in the late war, married Susan McNutt. Mr. Clark was married the second time, to Nancy A. Toutman, who is the mother of nine children, all of whom are living. Chas. A. married Jennie Kinzer, and lives in Cerro Gordo township. They have one child, Lyman. Thomas married Francis Lindsay, farms in Cerro Gordo township, and has two children, Horace and Benjamin. Henry Clay and wife, née Hannah Thompson, with three children, live in Missouri. Alfred, Mary N. and Jennie D. are at home. Mr. Clark has never lost a child, nor has either of them ever deprived him of a whole night's rest. Mr. Clark relates that his son, John H., was on the frontier during the war, and that, after his time was out, the regiment was ordered to proceed farther. J. H. wrote to his father of the affair, and Mr. Clark was advised to see Mr. Oglesby, and he wrote to him, referring to several leading men of Springfield. As a result Mr. Oglesby wrote an excellent letter to Mr. Clark, stating that the regiment was ordered back within three-quarters of an hour after the receipt of the letter.

MR. O. T. CHAMBERS, native of Indiana, moved from that state to Piatt county, Illinois, in 1864. He first rented a farm one mile from where he now lives, and then bought a farm near Pierson station. He and his wife own 280 acres of land. He was married in 1871, to Sarah Wildman, and has three children living, Augustus, Hattie Daisy and Jesse Orville. Mr. Chambers went into the army from Indiana in 1861 in Co. F, 31st Ind. reg. The principal battles he engaged in were those of Fort Donelson and Shiloh. He was wounded at the latter place in September, 1862, and was discharged on account of the wound, which did not heal until two years afterward.

MR. HENRY P. CHAMBERS, farmer, moved from Indiana, his native state, directly to Piatt county in 1864. He owns 40 acres of land, which he has improved himself. He was married in 1875, to Sarah E. Stark, a native of Indiana. They have had two children, Elmer P. and Myrtie Stella.

MR. G. W. CARTER, a farmer in the southwestern part of Unity township, was born in Ohio and reared in Kentucky. He moved from the latter state to Vermilion county, Illinois, in 1852. From this county he moved to Macon county and, in 1869, settled on the place where he now lives. At that time the place was raw prairie. He has put all improvements on it, including the setting out of about four hundred and fifty trees. Mr. Carter made mention of a deer which was killed in Unity township in 1870. This was probably the last deer killed in the county. On March 12, 1835, Mr. Carter and Miss Sarah M. Fugate were married. They have had sixteen children, only five of whom are living. Sarah married Mr. John B. Starr, who died, leaving one child, Fannie; she married Mr. A. Foreman, and they with their one child live in Champaign county. Mrs. Starr married Mr. John J. Neyhard and lived in Piatt county until her death; she left five children. Cora B., Sally, Anna and George are now living with their grandfather, Mr. G. W. Carter. Joseph Carter married Rebecca E. Ward; he died, but three of his children, Rosa, Dora and Taylor, are still living; Mrs. Carter married again and is now living in Macon county. Richard A. Carter married Margaret Clifton; they had five children, George, Jared, William, Joseph and D. Richmond. Zachariah T. Carter married Jane Davenport; she died, leaving two children, one of whom, Addy Nevada, is now living; he married Mrs. Fannie Fisher, and now is a farmer in Missouri. Mary C. married W. Benjamin McDaniel, a farmer, who lives in Kansas; they have five children. Lemuel S. Carter married Katie A. Brown and lives on a farm in Unity township; they have two children, Clara M. and Leon M. Mr. Lemuel Carter is probably the only professional hunter in this county. He has been a hunter ever since he was a child. He ships yearly on an average 700 ducks, 1,200 rabbits, 1,500 prairie chickens, 2,500 quails and 2,500 snipe. He ships to Chicago over $1,000 worth of game a year. He has killed as high as forty-two prairie chickens in one day, and in one day's hunt he has shot, one at a time, sixteen dozen snipe. He sold this lot to another hunter on the ground for $25. He considers that he handles the finest dogs in the state; they are imported, and are Irish setters, English pointers and Scotch pointers. He owns one dog now for which he has a standing bid at St. Louis of $300. Mr. G. W. Carter was ordained a Baptist minister in 1844. He has preached in Vermilion, Champaign and Christian counties in this state. Mr. Carter's eldest son, George, married Martha V. Foreman, and has four children, Charles T., Mississippi, Susan and Flora Belle.

MR. J. W. LOWTHER, farmer, Voorhies, is a native of Ohio, who moved from there directly to Illinois and settled in Piatt county in 1869. He owns 120 acres of land. He went into the army from Ohio in the 140th Ohio reg., national guards.

Mrs. GEORGE DEEDS, née Eunice Wildman, is a native of New York. She moved to Pennsylvania, from there to Ohio, and then came to Piatt county in 1845. She was married in 1846, and moved to Will county, where she lived till 1861, when she came back to Unity township, where she has lived in one house for eighteen years. Mr. Deeds went to Missouri, and while at his brother's he took sick and died. Mr. Deeds was a farmer. They had no children. Some of Mrs. Deeds' nieces have from time to time lived with her.

MR. S. S. DUDLEY, a farmer in Unity township, is a native of Ashland county, Ohio. He moved from Ohio to Connecticut, and from that state to Illinois in 1864, and in 1866 settled in Piatt county on the land where he now lives. He owns 240 acres of land, and has put all the improvements on it, including the planting out of some two hundred fruit and ornamental trees. He was married in 1867, to Miss Elizabeth J. Porter, of Moultrie county. They have two children, Eddie Earnest and Mary Ethel. Mrs. Dudley has been afflicted with the third-day ague for six years, three weeks being the longest absence of the chill during that time. This fact shows that the malaria is not yet all out of Piatt county. Mrs. Dudley, in speaking of her early home on the prairie, stated that it was quite customary for herself and her several mile distant neighbors to exchange visits, taking their cows and staking them out to enjoy a new field of grass while the women chatted over knitting or sewing. While making these visits Mrs. Dudley became quite an expert snake-killer. In speaking of the first settlers in his immediate neighborhood, Mr. Dudley stated as his opinion that a Mr. J. P. Way, who settled in T. 16, R. 5, Sec. 23, was the earliest settler in his vicinity. Mr. Way was from Connecticut, and moved from this county to Nebraska. The most of the land in the southern part of this county was formerly owned by speculators. Those who settled in the prairie tried to open farms without fences, and immediately trouble arose between the stockmen, who wanted plenty of range for their stock, and the farmers, who wanted to till the land. They almost fought over the matter. A gentleman who is now a prominent citizen of Moultrie county was once known to watch his stock all day with a gun in hand. The first few years Mr. Dudley farmed he used to get up each night and ride over the place to see if stock was on the farm. Wolves have frequently been seen in Mr. Dudley's neighborhood since the war. A deer was killed by Tom Loyd, of Macon county, in section 23 of Unity township, in 1867, which was one of the last killed in Piatt county. The first six winters Mr. Dudley was in this state he was a school teacher. He taught two schools at Milmine, two at Ridge Chapel, and two at Lovington. He was school treasurer for six years of district No. 6, township 16. He was the third treasurer, William Bouser being the first, and John Carothers the second. In 1870 school land was sold in this township for $13,660. At first the whole school township was laid off into four districts, but finally, after quite a struggle among the people, it was laid off into nine districts. Mr. T. J. Kiser, of Hammond, is the present treasurer of the township. Mr. Dudley was not in the army, but during the war was in the government employ, and helped to rebuild Fort Hale, at New Haven, Connecticut. Since being in this county he has been connected with the Sabbath-school movement. For two years he was president of the Unity Township Sunday-school convention. He is a member of the Methodist Episcopal church.

MR. JAMES DAVIES, a farmer of Unity township, was born in England in 1812. His parents were natives of the same country. He came to America, in 1856, at the instigation of a brother then in California, and who afterward moved to that state. While crossing the ocean they encountered a fearful storm, which lasted two days and nights. Mr. Davies' mother came to America, and died at the age of seventy-nine. Upon landing in America he moved to Ohio, and from there, in 1863, he emigrated to Coles county, Illinois. He next moved to Douglas county, and in 1867 he settled in Piatt county. Mrs. Davies, née Anne Phillips, was born in England in 1815, and in 1840 her marriage with Mr. Davies was celebrated in Shropshire, where they lived until their emigration to America. Both have relatives in England and in America. They have had six children. Walter was killed at the battle of Murfreesborough. Elizabeth married Mr. Easton (see his name). The rest of the family are all school teachers. Diana attended school at Valparaiso. Anna has taught about twenty-four terms of school, and attended school at Valparaiso. Hortense H. has attended the State Normal and the school at Valparaiso. Her school-teaching experience lasts through twenty terms.

MR. JOHN H. EASTON, farmer, is a native of Ohio. His father was a native of Massachusetts, and his mother of New York. He is of English lineage. In 1854 he moved from Ohio to Illinois, spending the winter in Will county, but was bound for Piatt county. After farming for others for five years, he began teaching, and has taught in this and other counties for sixteen years. He bought land with the fruits of his educational labors. He bought his present home, a farm of 120 acres, in 1881. His first wife, née Elizabeth Helton, died March 25, 1865. She had one son, Henry O. He next married Elizabeth Davies, August 12, 1868. She has had three children, Alberta D., Maud Mary and Walter. Mr. Easton went to the army, in Co. F, of the 2d Ill. Cav., and was out thirteen months, but, though in plenty of skirmishes, was in no regular battles. Owing to sickness, lung and typhoid fever, he had to come home. Mr. Easton taught eight terms of school at Mackville. He has been township assessor.

MR. JAMES M. EYRSE, farmer, Unity township, is of Scotch and Irish lineage, and a native of Virginia. He can trace his ancestors back to Virginia colony days. He moved from Virginia to Tazewell county, Illinois, in 1854, thence to Macon county, and from there to Piatt county in 1871. At that time he bought his farm of 120 acres, where he now lives. In 1849 he married Ann Eliza Whisman, who died in 1859, leaving three children. Eliza Y. married David Lewis, a farmer in Douglas county. They have one child. Virginia A. is unmarried, and lives at home. Henry J. married Sally M. Galford, a native of Ohio, and lives in Unity township. They have one child, Laura Belle. At the time of Mr. Eyrse leaving Virginia, he ranked as major in the militia of that state. He served in the Mexican war in a light infantry company from Virginia. He was in the 1st Va. reg., Augusta volunteers, under General Taylor. He was in no regular battle, and the principal skirmishing was done in opening communication after the battle of Buena Vista between Camargo and Monterey. Upon our asking for camp-fire stories, Mr. Eyrse remarked that their company was made use of, and had "no chance to joke over camp-fires." Mr. Eyrse is regarded as quite a good drill master at the present day.

MR. EZRA FAY (deceased) was born May 27, 1813, in New York. He was of German and Irish descent. Moved from New York to Ohio, and from there to Illinois in 1835. His widow lives on the land he bought soon after coming to the county. He married Acena Holden, October, 1831. She died in 1839, leaving one daughter, who married Samuel Vanfleet, of Indiana. He next married Elizabeth Hogland. Three of their children are living. Richard, a farmer in Unity township, married Mary Frellinger, and has four children; Sarah J. married John Nighswander; Riley is living with his mother in Unity township. Mr. Fay died April 6, 1877.

MR. JOHN FORD, a farmer in Unity township, is a native of Ireland. He came to America and to Monticello in 1859. He moved onto the present farm of about two hundred acres near thirteen years ago. He has been a hard worker, and got his farm by feeding cattle and working by the month. He was married in 1866, to Elizabeth Madden, a native of Ireland. They have six children living: Maggie, Patrick, Malei, Jane, John and Kate. Mr. Ford is a member of the Catholic church.

MR. GAMALIEL GREGORY, farmer, is a native of New York. He moved to Ohio, and in 1855 to Piatt county. His father, Josiah Gregory, was of English descent. He settled in Champaign county in 1858, and moved to Bement in 1878. Mr. G. Gregory married Mary Monroe, November, 1856, born in this county July 29, 1837. Her parents both died in this county. She has five sisters and two brothers living. She has three children living. Wm. G. Gregory married Kate Crawford, has one child, and is a druggist in Coles county; J. R. is farming at home; Rosalia married George Mumper, a farmer in Champaign county. Mr. Gregory has been town collector and town clerk, and is a member of the masonic lodge at Bement.

MR. GILBERT GREENE, farmer, was born in Tennessee in 1824. He lived in Kentucky until he was twenty-five, and in 1854 came to Piatt county. He started to Champaign county, "got out of the way a little, found this county good enough, and so stopped." He first settled about one and a half miles below his present home, then, after two years' residence in Champaign county, settled on the Prairie in Bement township. The next move was to the place he now lives on, which he has improved. He has a fair sized orchard, which bears a good deal of fruit. He was married in 1845, to Martha Ramsey. Of Mr. Greene's children, Wm. Boyd married Mary Lane, and in 1871 moved to Nebraska; they have four children. Ruth married Shannon Fristoe, and lives in Bement; they have three children, Horace, Walter and Jesse Pearl. Margaret C. married Allen Moore, and lives in Neosho county, Kansas; they have five children. Susan married

MR. JOHN W. C. GRAY, farmer, is a native of Pickaway county, Ohio. His mother is a native of Ohio and lives with one of her children in Iowa. His father was a native of Iowa. Both of Mr. Gray's grandfathers were in the revolutionary war, and two of his brothers went to the late war, one of whom served throughout the rebellion. Mr. Gray is one of a family of six children. He would not have settled in Piatt county had it not been for Mr. Jack Riddle. While on business in the county for Mr. Kious, Mr. Riddle persuaded him to work for Mr. John Piatt. While working for him he was hired to ship cattle in 1856. A portion of the year 1856 he herded cattle at Blue Mound for Mr. John Piatt. Mr. Gray relates some interesting items in regard to snakes, which were found on the prairie at an early day here. He says that by actual count and record in the season of 1856 he killed 1,100 rattlesnakes, and has killed as high as thirty-three in one day. That same season he saw as many as from nineteen to twenty-nine deer in one herd, and he captured eleven fawns, some of which were sent back to New York. Mr. Gray was married in October, 1861, to Mrs. Eliza Crain, who died February 26, 1876. In April, 1877, he married Mrs. R. (Murry) Myres, who had one child at the time of her last marriage. She is a native of New Hampshire and came with her parents to Menard county, Illinois, in 1846. When Mr. Gray began improving his farm, it was overrun with hazel-brush and willows. His ten acre orchard is in as good a condition as any orchard in the county and contains all small fruit that will succeed in growing in this part of the state. He built his present residence about nine years ago. He thinks he has the best cellar in the county. He settled on his present farm in 1869, having previously lived where Mr. James Wharton now lives. Mr. Gray's well selected library of at least two hundred volumes shows that he is one of the farmers of the county who believes in keeping up with the times. He was justice of the peace for six years and has been elected road commissioner and supervisor.

MR. HENRY GROSS, a merchant and farmer of Mackville, is a native of Germany. He came to America in 1853, and for eight years remained in New York, and then moved to Chicago, where he remained till 1857, when he moved to Marion county. In 1858 he moved to Piatt county and settled on the land where Mackville is located. Mr. Gross came alone from Germany, the rest of his family came afterward. He now has four brothers and one sister in the county. His parents, Casper Gross and wife, came to America during the war. Mr. Henry Gross married Sophia Gross, a native of Germany, in 1861. They have had eight children, two of whom are dead. Sigel T. Gross is bookkeeper in the store of Gross & Biggs, of Mackville. Anna, Alexander, Thusnelda, Henry and Sophia are at home. Mr. Henry Gross is the first and only postmaster that Mackville has had. He was school director for ten or twelve years, and filled a vacancy as justice of the peace. He has also been collector, clerk and supervisor of Unity township.

MR. JNO. GORDON (deceased) was a farmer in Unity township, and owned 120 acres of land. He married Anna Sloam. Both were natives of Ireland, came to America in 1863, and to Piatt county in 1866. They had eight children, six of whom are living, Felix G., Rosealla, Maggie, Mary, Ida May and Catharine S. On the 17th of March, 1879, one of their boys was buried; on the 18th of the same month their house burned down; on the 29th of the month an infant was born; and about a year from this time Mr. Gordon died.

MR. GEORGE GOODSON (deceased) was a native of Douglas county, Illinois. He moved in Piatt county in 1873. He was married in 1871, to Candacy Pierson. She has no children. Her parents were from Indiana, and moved to Piatt county in 1867. Mr. Charles Goodson was married, January 28, 1882, to Emma Gow, who until recently made her home at John Harshbarger's. They reside near Goodson station.

MR. JNO. GOODSON, farmer, was born in Douglas county, Illinois, and came to this county in 1878. In 1862 he went to California and began farming and stock raising, and remained there fourteen years. He was married in California, to Miss Julia Ingerham. They have one daughter, Mollie. Mr. Goodson came back in 1879 and built a nice farm residence of nine rooms. He is fast getting things in good shape about the farm, and it bids fair to be one of the best places in the county. He is a stock dealer and has some fine sheep and cattle. Mr. Goodson went to the army, was taken prisoner and sworn not to fight until he was exchanged. He was not exchanged and so went to California.

MR. ROBERT GRIFFIN (deceased) was married in Indiana, to Louisa Thompson, and moved to Piatt county in 1870. He lived on Mr. Quick's place for a time, and then moved to the place he lived at the time of his death about five years ago. He left a widow and five children. Laura married John Bogard, and moved to Missouri. Harriet, the wife of Christopher Denny, lives with her child, Myrtle Olive, in Unity township. Mary Ellen, Henry Charles and William Edgar are at home. Mrs. Griffin owns about twenty-one acres of land. Mr. Griffin was a soldier in the late war.

MR. DANIEL HARSHBARGER, a retired farmer, was born in Champaign county, Ohio, and is of German descent. His father moved from Ohio to Montgomery county, Indiana, and in 1823 made the second settlement in that county. He died in Illinois in 1857. His wife died in Indiana in 1853. Mr. Daniel Harshbarger was married in 1834, to Miss Huldah Quick, of Montgomery county. They moved to Piatt county in 1837, and for the first summer lived with Daniel's father in a cabin built the same year. In the fall Daniel went into his own round-log cabin covered with clapboards and containing a hickory pole bedstead. When he came to the county he had $200 in money, five sheep, one horse, one cow, one hog, and some spinning wheels upon which Mrs. Harshbarger did all the spinning for the family. Mr. Harshbarger now has a walnut chest which is a hundred years old and a pair of steelyards, which came from Germany, that are one hundred and fifty years old. This family remained in their round-log cabin until 1848, when they built the second brick house in the county. The brick was burned by Jim Bennet on Mr. Harshbarger's place. Mr. and Mrs. Harshbarger still occupy this with their son John and his family. When about fifty-five years of age Mr. Harshbarger stopped his long-continued hard labor and deeded his ten or eleven hundred acres of land to his children, with the proviso that they were to keep himself and wife. After stating this fact to us he very contentedly remarked, "the children all appear to be reconciled to the way I divided it." Mr. Michael Harshbarger is Mr. Daniel Harshbarger's oldest living son (see his name). His daughter Sarah married Mr. Joseph Baker (see his name). Mr. John Harshbarger was married in 1868 to Anna Gaw, from Indiana. Their children are Carrie, William D. and Frank Merritt. John is a farmer and stock dealer and lives on the old homestead place where he has lived all his life. Miss Emma Gaw, Mrs. John Harshbarger's sister, is making her home with them at present. Miss Emma seems to possess natural talent for drawing. We suggest that she should embrace all possible chances of cultivating such talent. Barbara Harshbarger married William Carroll and is living in Douglas county. Their children's names are Ivory Belle, Ivol, Icel Lee and Florence Mabel. Mr. Daniel Harshbarger was the first justice of the peace in his section of the county. He served as such for twelve years, until they began lawing, when he refused to serve longer. A gentleman who has known "Uncle Dan" a long while says that he is "as honest as the day is long," and that his extreme sense of justice led him to be considered one of the best peacemakers in the county. His law was, "Do right whatever the consequences," and he has been known to prevent suits many times by going out of his way to see the men and persuading them to come to settlement. He married the first couple who united in the bonds of matrimony in Unity township, and for six or eight years performed the marriage ceremony for all who were married in Lake Fork timber. We must tell a little joke on "Uncle Dan" which was related to us by a neighbor of his. What we have already told of his peace-making abilities would lead one to think that it would grieve him very much to have a neighbor think ill of him. One morning when out he met a neighbor, Mr. Thomas Goodson, who, instead of giving his usual "good morning!" said in a very sober tone of voice "I thought I would tell you there is a coolness between us." "Uncle Dan," with a surprised and anxious look, and in that deep and earnest tone of voice of his, said, "Why, Tommy, Tommy, what is it! I never had a hard feeling toward you in the world." Mr. Goodson, after carrying his joke to the desired extent, remarked that "it was the sharp breeze which caused the coolness between them." Mr. Harshbarger held the office of supervisor for one year. He was the first person to make a profession of religion on Lake Fork and was baptized June 28, 1842, by Mr. John Collins, and in the same fall Mrs. Harshbarger, Mrs. Joseph Moore and Mrs. James Utterback were baptized. Mr. Harshbarger relates that in early days in their neighborhood the people used often to get quite lonesome. At Mr. Monroe's they used to go on top of the house to watch across the prairie, hoping to see some one coming. In case they should, word would soon be sent around and all the neighborhood would collect at one house. Since writing the above we have received the following items from Mr. John Harshbarger. He took the measure of twelve of the apple trees which his father set out in 1839 and found that they averaged in circumference five feet and one inch—the largest measuring seven feet and three inches. The tallest tree was forty feet and seven inches in height, and in the twelve the following varieties are represented, Early Harvest, Golden Pippin, Vandaver Pippin and Spitzenburg. These trees are in a thriving condition and in 1881 some of them bore as high as twenty-five bushels of apples apiece. Mr.

Harshbarger has in his possession a Seth Thomas clock which has kept good time for fifty years.

MR. SAMUEL HARSHBARGER, farmer, was born in Ohio in 1811. He moved from Ohio to Montgomery county, Indiana, in 1823, and from there to Piatt county in 1837. He was married in Indiana, to Sarah Quick, who had eleven children, seven of whom are living. Clarrissa was the wife of Nathaniel Shonkwiler. Aaron married Arvilla Wildman, who had seven children. He moved to Texas, and next married Jennie Romine. His third wife was a Miss Waters. Elizabeth Harshbarger married Alfred Taylor (now deceased), and has five children. She lives in Champaign county. Ambrose Harshbarger married Margaret Richardson and lives on the old homestead place. They have six children, Samuel, Caroline, who married Wm. Taylor, and lives in Douglas county, Lucy, Effie, William and Henry. Jefferson Harshbarger married Francis Sexton and has four children. He lives in Champaign county. Isaac married Mary J. Goff. He has a large family of children, and lives at Atwood. Samuel married Emmazilla Wildman, and lives in Unity township. They have a family of children, some of whose names are: Della, Arthur, Clara B. and Reuben Horace. Naomi Harshbarger is the wife of David Corell, a sewing machine agent of Bement. They have two children living, May and William. Sylvia Harshbarger, deceased, was the wife of David Cade, of Douglas county. He was married again in 1881, and lives in Champaign county. The death of the first Mrs. Harshbarger occurred in 1853. Mr. Harshbarger next married Mrs. Melissa Holden, the widow of an old settler in that part of the county. She died about 1870, and Mr. Harshbarger took for his third wife Miss Eliza Randolph. The second year after Mr. Harshbarger moved to the county, there were seven families in the neighborhood, and at one time every member of the seven families was sick except himself and son Aaron. Mr. Harshbarger had to leave the sick and go to mill at Eugene, Indiana, seventy miles distant. Before going he threshed the grain by having the horses tramp it. He was gone eight days, and upon his return did not expect to find all the family alive. Mr. Harshbarger relates one of his deer hunts in the following manner: "I was standing in the woods on a log when I saw a big buck coming toward me. I let him come close and then shot. The gun cracked and the deer came bawling and jumping toward me, and I—climbed up a sapling." Mr. Harshbarger has long been regarded a "bee hunter." He has worked with bees ever since he was fifteen years old. He has had bees every year since. He has made hundreds of dollars with his bees alone. He has found at least seventy bee-trees in his lifetime. The most honey he ever got out of a tree was ten gallons after it was strained. Mr. Harshbarger was ordained a minister in the Christian church in 1843, and has preached on a large circuit extending throughout this county and into Macon, DeWitt, Champaign, Vermilion, Douglas and Moultrie counties. He has evidently done a great deal of good in his lifetime, and his kindly countenance and earnest words indicate that he will do much more yet.

MR. MICHAEL O. HARSHBARGER, farmer, near Atwood, is a native of Indiana, and came to Piatt county in 1837. He was married October 30, 1862, to Emeline Stevens, who died in 1865, leaving one boy, Charles M. He next married Arvilla Whetsel in 1869. She had two children, Dora May and John Lee. Mr. Harshbarger owns about 460 acres of land, part of which lies in Douglas county. He has evidently been a hardworking man, as the result of his labors shows. In 1876 he built one of the finest houses in the county. It contains fifteen rooms and cost $8,000. The brick for the house were made on his own farm. He burnt some 180,000 brick and sold enough to pay for putting up the walls of his house. This is an example of thrift and energy not often shown in this country. In 1881 he built one of the best frame barns in the county. It is 68×60 feet, is two story, will hold sixteen horses and contain one hundred ton of hay. Mr. Harshbarger has made his money by farming and raising stock. When he was married he had $600 and some land which his father, Mr. Daniel Harshbarger, gave him. In conversing with Mr. Harshbarger we quite readily discovered strong filial devotion, which most men of his age, if they have it, are quite successful in covering up. Since taking the above notes from Mr. Harshbarger, we have regretted to hear that his wife died on January 9, 1882.

MR. RICHARD HELTON, merchant, was born in 1822, in North Carolina. His parents were natives of the same state, from which they moved to Wayne county, Indiana, sixteen miles in the woods from Newport. They, with eight children, landed at this place between Christmas and New Year's, and the snow was knee-deep. They lived here beside a big log and a camp-fire until spring, hauling all provisions on a one-horse sled from Newport. Mr. Helton moved to Douglas county in 1857 or 1858. He was married in 1838, to Ann Willis. They have lived for ten or twelve years in Piatt county. He was the first person who built a house in Atwood. His store was the first in the town and he opened the first grain office in the place. Henry Helton and wife, née Josephine Willingham, have one child, and live in Douglas county. Joel married Francis Smitson and is a grain trader in Atwood. Alexander married Mary Faulhaber, lives in Atwood and is also a grain dealer. He has three children, Birdie and Gertie, twins, and Alfred. George and Rebecca, the youngest daughter, lives at home. Janie married Thomas Barnes, a carpenter, and lives in Atwood. Mr. Helton is a member of the masonic order and of a life insurance society.

MR. J. A. HAWKS, a miller and tile maker, of Mackville, is of English and German descent, and is a native of New York. He came west in 1869. He taught school at Mackville for four terms after he first came to the county. He was in the general merchandise business for a time with Mr. Gross and then began milling. In 1876 he bought the mill which Griggs & Marshall had built. He was married in 1877, to Mary Mitchell, a native of Ohio. They reside in Mackville and have no children. Mr. Hawks went to the war from New York, in Battery G, 3d N. Y. Lt. Art. Roanoke Island, Plymouth and Kingston were the principal battles in which he engaged. He was never wounded, but was taken prisoner and was one month in prison. Mr. Hawks has been superintendent of a Sunday school and township treasurer and supervisor.

MR. S. V. HAGEMAN, hardware merchant, Hammond, is a native of Pike county, Illinois. He moved from there to Logan county in 1863 or 1864, and in 1875 settled on a farm in Piatt county. After staying there five years he left his farm, not selling it, however, and moved into Hammond, built a store building and, with his brother, A. J. Hageman, opened a hardware and grocery store in June, 1881. He was married in 1874, to Lizzie Rathbun, of Pike county. They have had three children, two of whom are living, Oscar Y. and Silas.

MR. JOHN W. KAGEY, a farmer of Unity township, is a native of Virginia. He moved from that state to Illinois in 1869, and in 1870 moved to Piatt county. In 1876 he bought his present home of 80 acres. He was married in 1865, to Mollie E. Shaver, a native of Virginia. Two children, B. Frank and C. Claudius, have blessed their union.

MR. SAMUEL KARICOFÉ, farmer, Voorhies, was born in Virginia, from which state he moved to Indiana, and thence to Piatt county, where he bought land in 1869, and now owns 160 acres. He was married in 1868, to Mary Ann Cummins, and has three children, Minnie, Charles and Sylvester.

MR. T. J. KISER, a lumber merchant of Hammond, is a native of Macon county. He came to Piatt county in 1873, and began his present business. He is school treasurer of his township. He was married in December, 1873, to Eliza Adamson. They have two children, Ethlyn E. and Loran P.

MR. WILLIAM R. KISER came to Piatt county in 1876 and went immediately into partnership with T. J. Kiser in the lumber business. He was married in 1879, to Miss May Baldwin.

MR. JOHN LOVE ("Capt. Love"), a farmer near Hammond, is a native of Pike county, Missouri. His father was a native of South Carolina, and his mother was born in Ireland. They moved from South Carolina to Pike county, Missouri. His father was one of a little colony that went out in 1815, and in 1818 he died in Missouri. Capt. Love's stepfather, Mr. Welch Allison, moved to Macon county in 1834 or 1835, and his mother died near Decatur in 1836. Capt. Love was one of a family of four children. His brother Andrew moved from Decatur to near Lovington, on the old Snyder place. Andrew had a post-office in his house, which was named Lovington. After the town was built it was named the same. Capt. Love came to Macon county from Missouri in 1834, then returned to Missouri, and again in 1835 came to Decatur, and in January, 1836, began clerking for Mr. William Cantrall. After about seven months he began clerking for Renshaw & Finley (afterward Renshaw alone), and remained here for several years. From what we hear of Mr. Love at this time, he must have been considered quite a business manager. Although but eighteen years old, he had a man's business entrusted to him. His health having failed somewhat, Mr. Love went to his brother's farm, near Lovington, and went into the stock business. He was with his brother most of the time from this on, until his marriage, in 1842, to Charlotte Emerson, a sister of Judge Emerson. He then settled on a farm of his own near Lovington, which place he afterward sold, and moved to Judge Emerson's place, in Macon county. In 1853 he stopped farming, and bought out a little store in Lovington, and remained there till 1856. He sold out then, and somewhat unexpectedly went to Sullivan, where he remained till 1859, when he sold out. During the year 1860 he was out of business. After his return from the army, he bought a farm in De Witt, and remained there till 1868, when he moved to the farm he now lives on. He owns all the section except 160 acres, which he gave to his daughter. Capt. Love's first wife died in 1869. Their eldest daughter, Mary Ellen, married Dr. J. W. Snyder, and they, with their two children, live in Gilman. M. Jennie married John R. Cantrall (see his name). Mr. C. H. Love married Adaline Evans, and lives in Christian county. They have two children. He helped Mr. C. D. Moore to lay out the town of Hammond, and was the second grain merchant in the place. Capt. Love was married in 1871, to Sarah A. Cooper, a native of Iowa. Her mother, sixty years of age, is living with Mrs. Love. Her parents moved to Iowa in 1844, in which state her father died, after which her mother moved to Sangamon county. On June 28, 1861, Mr. Love went to the army as captain of Co. E of the 21st Ill., Grant's own regiment, organized from the seventh congressional district. He did a great deal of traveling about, but was in only one regular battle, that of Frederickstown. He was taken sick with a severe attack of pneumonia, and was ultimately discharged because of chronic diarrhœa. Although sick, he had been with the company several times. Upon Capt. Love's leaving the regiment the officers and his men gave him articles in sealed envelopes, with the injunction that he was not to open them until he reached Nashville. Upon our urgent and repeated appeals, and against his protestations, we have at last succeeded in gaining his permission to have these testimonials printed in connection with the sketch of his life.

TESTIMONIALS TO CAPT. JOHN LOVE.

CAMP 21ST ILL. VOLS., NEAR MURFREESBORO, TENN.

February 20, 1863.

WHEREAS, Owing to long and almost irreparable ill health, our honored comrade in arms and fellow officer, Capt. John Love, of Co. E, 21st Ill. Vols., has been compelled to retire from our present field of labor; therefore be it Resolved, I. That Captain John Love has our warmest sympathies in his afflictions, and that it is with feelings of sincere and profound regret the decrees of an inevitable fate have declared that we must give him the hand of a long and perhaps final farewell.

II. That in Capt. Love we recognize all the attributes of a refined gentleman, an agreeable associate, a noble companion in arms, and that in him the Government loses one of his brightest ornaments, most valuable, patriotic, devoted and faithful in all of his duties.

III. That bidding adieu to our old associate—the ever faithful companion of all our hardships, privations and dangers, such as only a soldier can realize—we can heartily breathe an earnest “God bless you,” and when in the future we are engaged in the arduous duties of the soldiers' life, we will recur with memories of sweet pleasure and an honorable pride to the days and times when Captain Love made one of our number.

IV. That we make this voluntary testimonial to his virtues and moral worth, because such are alone due to the brave, earnest, hopeful and uncompromising defenders of the right—the Government of our Fathers.

MEMORIAL OF RESPECT.

Presented to Capt. Love on the morning of his departure from Co. E 21st Ill. Vols.

About to take farewell of your company and rejoin your family in Illinois, it may be a pleasure to yourself and friends, that your company thus express their lasting friendship and esteem for one who has been so long their captain, and our serious regret for the misfortune, and sympathy for the long and lingering sickness that has at length deprived us of one whom we will so sadly miss.

We shall always admire the high sense of duty that stamped all your actions; try to imitate the purity of morals and principles that characterized all your conduct; reflect the indefatigable zeal that has always actuated in all your effort to suppress this foul rebellion; and feel grateful for the anxious care you always manifested even in your sickness for your company. In you we feel not only the loss of an earnest, dutiful officer, but a sincere, tried and impartial friend. While we remain in the field with a determination to fight to the last, the execrable fiends of this hideous rebellion, we hope health may be restored, that your life may be spared for many years of usefulness, that you may long enjoy the sweets of social intercourse, a blessing to your family, an honor to your friends.

MR. JOHN LOWE, farmer, is a native of Kentucky. He moved from there direct to Illinois in 1861, and to Piatt county in 1869. He lived for a time in Sangamon township. He married Sarah T. Atkin, who has three children, Edward, William and Albert, living. Mr. Lowe went to the army from Vermilion county in Co. B of the 25th Ill. He was out four years, serving one year in the 149th reg. He engaged in the battles of Pea Ridge, Perryville, Murfreesborough, Mission Ridge, and also those of the Atlanta campaign. He was never wounded or taken prisoner.

MR. T. F. LIVENGOOD, farmer and minister, is of German descent, and was born in 1830, in North Carolina. He moved from there to Indiana, and thence to Moultrie county, Illinois, and to Piatt in 1861. He married Catharine Pearson, of Indiana, in 1850. His son, Athan

A., married Margaret Moore, and lives in Champaign county. David F. married Barbara Meeker, and lives in Douglas county. Permelia is the wife of Vincent Quick, and has two children, Oscar and Lena. The names of the remaining children are Mathias E., Albert, Sarah, Lilley, Cora, Ella Pauline and Addie. Mr. Livengood was ordained as a minister in the Christian church in 1866. He formerly preached on a circuit running through Champaign, Piatt, DeWitt, Moultrie, Douglas and Vermilion counties. Now he travels only in Douglas, Vermilion, Champaign and Piatt counties. He has organized seven churches in Champaign county, where most of his preaching has been done, one in DeWitt and one in Piatt county. When he settled in this section of the country he found the people hospitable. At an early day here the people always called upon the new settlers, congratulating them on coming into the county. Mr. Livengood preached his first sermon in the Taylor school-house in Douglas county. Upon our asking him in regard to the first couple he married in this county, he said: "I remember how I was scared, but don't remember their names." He told us of once going fifteen miles, swimming the West Okau and traveling bad roads, to marry a couple. He says he "had a good time otherwise, but got no pay." Since he was ordained a minister he has made an average of one hundred conversions each year. The largest amount he has ever received in one year from one church has been $140; the least amount, nothing.

MR. WILLIAM G. LEAVITT, farmer, Hammond, was born in 1825, in New Hampshire. He was married in his native state, to Mary French, a widow. They had ten children, eight of whom are living. Sarah and Margaret are married and living in New Hampshire. Harriet, the wife of V. C. Sleeper, lives in Wellington, Kansas, and has three children. Abbey married Scott Moonan; has six children, Willie Walter, Fred, Park, Charles and Sarah. James William is married, has one child, and lives in Cerro Gordo township. Herbert married Elnora Simms, has one child, and lives in Kansas. Harry W. and Luther M. are living at home. Mrs. Leavitt died in 1872, and Mr. Leavitt, in 1873, was married to Mrs. Mary T. Osgood. Mr. Leavitt, upon moving from New Hampshire, settled in Menard county, from which place he moved to Piatt county, and bought the half section of land upon which he still lives. At present, however, he owns 240 acres of land. He improved the farm himself, and has planted out at least five hundred trees.

MR. WILLIAM A. LISTON, carpenter and farmer, of Hammond, was born in Ohio in 1822. He moved from that state to Macon county, Illinois, in 1859, and to Piatt county in 1872. At a previous time he moved into Piatt county, but only remained two years. He was justice of the peace for about six years. About 1843 he and Phebe Cooper, born in Ohio in 1825, united their lives, and ten children, nine of whom are living, is the result of their union. Jeremiah E. was killed in the late war; Rachel L. is married and lives in Maroa; Albert is married and lives in Missouri; William is in Decatur; Sarah C. is married to N. B. Wallace, and lives in southern Illinois; Walter H. is a barber in Decatur, while Joseph, Jacob, Matthew and Zarelda A. are at home.

MR. J. W. LYNCH, blacksmith, Hammond, is a native of this state, and moved from southern Illinois to Christian county, and thence to Piatt county in 1868. He was raised a blacksmith, and was the second blacksmith in Hammond, having bought out George Ragland, of that place. Mr. Lynch first married Miss Nancy Booker, who died, after having one child, William Henry. He next married Elizabeth Balmer, who is the mother of six children, Edward, Sally, John, Myrtie, James and Charles.

MR. JESSE MONROE (deceased), a farmer, was born in Maryland. His father was a soldier in the revolution. He married Sarah Gordon, a native of Ohio. Her father was a captain in a spy company in the revolutionary war. At an early day, 1828, Mr. and Mrs. Monroe settled in Indiana. Later, in 1836, after some of their family were married, they moved to Piatt county, Illinois, to help locate their children. William Monroe and James Utterback came and entered land for themselves and Mr. Jesse Monroe, in 1836, which was the first entry of land in Unity township. Mr. Monroe, the subject of our sketch, had seven daughters and six sons. Four of his sons died in their youth. At the time of his settling in this county, four of the children were married. Two of them, however, moved with their father, and the others came at a later date. William Monroe married Sarah J. Moore in Indiana, and moved to Piatt county in 1836. Eliza married Mr. William Crain, and lived on what is yet often called the Crain farm, although owned by a near dozen different persons. She had three boys and two girls. Harvey married Cynthia Lane, of Indiana. After living two years in this county, he moved to Indiana, where, after coming home from the army, he died, leaving three children. Sarah E. married Samuel Hamilton, and moved into Douglas county. They have three children. John Crain is married, and lives on a part of the Crain farm (see his name). Emily married John Clapp, and lives on the old Crain homestead. Frank Crain, now of Gainesville, Texas, was married in 1874, to Mary E. Layson, who died in 1877. He next married Lizzie Tutin, a native of Wisconsin. They have one daughter. He went to Texas in 1877, and is a stock dealer there. Martha Monroe married Mr. James Utterback in Indiana, and moved to Piatt county in 1836. They lived in this county for about twenty years, and then moved to Iowa, where he has become quite a wealthy and prominent citizen. Ruth Monroe married Mr. Samuel Mosbarger, and lives in Douglas county. They have seven children, all grown. Sarah Monroe and Mr. Joseph Taylor married about 1838, and were the first couple married in Unity township. The wedding ceremony was performed on the place where Richard Monroe now lives. Mrs. Taylor married Mr. Thomas Goodson, and now lives in Tuscola. Nancy Monroe married Ezra Fay (see his name). Lydia Monroe married Mr. John Cook, and moved to Champaign. Both are dead. Two of their daughters married, but died of consumption, each leaving one child. Three of Mr. Cook's sons are living. Richard Monroe lives on the old homestead place (see his name). Mary E. Monroe married Mr. Gamalial Gregory (see his name). Two of Mr. Jesse Monroe's children, Jesse, Richard's twin brother, who died at the age of fourteen, and Harrison H., died within two days of each other, and were the first ones buried in Unity township.

MR. WILLIAM MONROE, formerly a resident farmer in this county, moved back to Indiana in 1865 and has remained there since. He was married January 28, 1835, to Sarah J. Moore. They have never had any children, but have done their share of taking care of others' children. During their married life they have had in charge as many as thirty-four children, sending twenty-two of them to school. Eight girls have been married from their house. The first winter, 1836-7, that Mr. Monroe spent in Piatt county he lived in the same house with Mr. James Utterback and family. On January 8, 1837, he moved into his own house, a log cabin 16×18 feet. The cabin was not yet complete. The roof was on and the floor laid, but a bed-quilt served as a door, while the fireplace was only built half-way to the mantle-piece and the hearth was not filled up. Two elm logs were thrown in the back of the fireplace to build the fire against, and in lieu of chairs and table Mr. and Mrs. Monroe sat in front of the fireplace on the edge of the floor, having their food placed on the floor between them.

On the day they moved Mr. Monroe killed a deer, and the wolves getting scent of it followed him home. That evening as he and his wife cooked it and ate the meat off the bones they threw them over the incomplete chimney into the yard, where they were eagerly snatched up by the waiting wolves without. When Mr. Monroe went out to drive them off they ran away, barking like little dogs. This winter proved to be quite a severe one. Mr. Monroe gradually completed his cabin, but in the meantime he used often to find their bed in the morning covered by an inch or two of snow. Mr. Monroe made quite a narrow escape with his life at the time of the sudden freeze in 1836. He and James Utterback started to East Fork, Coles county, for corn, when the snow was about knee deep. It began raining and continued until the ground was covered with a slush of snow and water. The men's clothes were thoroughly soaked with water and they were about half-way across the prairie when suddenly a piercing, fierce cold wind struck them. In ten minutes the slush was frozen sufficiently to bear the weight of a man. They unhitched their teams, leaving the oxen, while each mounted a horse and ran down to a Mr. Holden's. When they reached Mr. Holden's Mr. Monroe could not get off his horse. He was frozen fast to the hair of the horse, so that they had to pull him loose. He was then taken into the house, where all possible care was given him. It was over a week before they got their teams home. When Mr. Monroe got home after his trip for corn, he found Mr. Christopher Mosbarger, an old millwright, there, with his tools. As the folks were without bread, the millwright exclaimed, "Boys, get your oxen and grub hoes and cut the ice; by gracious, we makes a mill with prairie 'nigger-heads.'" In about four days the mill, the first on Lake Fork, was complete. The same mill was afterward moved to where Atwood now is and was run by a horse. It would grind from ten to twenty bushels a day. Mr. Monroe's folks were in the county five years before officers of any kind found them. Mr. William Monroe got up a petition which led to the location of a road from Monticello to Lake Fork, the first local road in that section of the county. William Monroe and Hiram Heath made the furrow across to Monticello. John Tenbrooke was the surveyor. After this, William Monroe got up and circulated a petition for the opening of a state road from Charleston to Bloomington. The legislature granted the petition and Daniel Stickle and Judge Hughes were appointed commissioners. George Heath was surveyor. The new road traversed the county very nearly in the track of the old road, which crossed from Monticello to the head of the timber, crossed the Fork and on down on the east side of the stream. A mail route was established, the mail being carried on horseback. Mr. O. C. Denslow was the first postmaster, and was on the land owned by Mr. Samuel Harshbarger. The postoffice was moved to Mr. Jesse Monroe's house and Richard Monroe was appointed postmaster. The route was discontinued after the Toledo, Wabash & Warsaw railroad was built. Mr. Monroe, when he went to Vandalia to enter his land, carried apple seeds home in his saddlebags and planted them. He reports that he and his neighbors did well in their farming. They were all sociable and peaceable. Nor were they lacking in hospitality. Mr. Monroe states that he has taken persons into the house to stay over night, until in the morning those nearest the door would actually have to get out of the way to permit the others to arise.

MR. RICHARD MONROE, farmer, is a native of Indiana. He came to Piatt county in 1836 and has lived longer in Unity township than any other person. He was married March 1, 1863, to Anna E. Gosney and lives on his father's old homestead. Mrs. Monroe's mother lies buried at the Bement cemetery. Her father married Mrs. M. Byers and lives in Bement. In 1876 Mr. Monroe built a very fine frame house containing ten rooms. He is gradually improving his place until in neatness and appearance it can compete with any other in the county.

MR. JOSEPH MOORE, "Buckskin Joe," farmer, was born in Ohio in 1812. He is of German and Irish descent. Twenty-four years of his life were spent in Kentucky, in which state he married Emelia B. Whittaker. He says that he visited this country about 1832, that he liked it better than the timber land where he had been living, so he went home, married, and came out here—Piatt county—about 1836. When he reached this part of the country he had just seventy-five cents, one-third of which he gave to Henry Sadorus for meal. His father was dead, but his mother and all the family came to this county. His mother died about 1857 or 1858, and now all the family are gone except himself and one sister. Mr. Moore entered a part of his present home place in 1838, and in 1844 put up what he supposes to be the first hewed log house in the township. He still lives in the house, which is 32×36 feet, and of which all the window and door casings are of hewed wood. In 1843 he put out an orchard of about five acres. His orchard seemed so large, his house appeared of such great size, that his neighbors declared that "he put one forty in the orchard, another in the house, and cut the timber off the other forty to put his house on." Mr. Moore tells some interesting facts in regard to the young ladies whom he knew in the pioneer days of this county. Two girls started from where Comargo now is and walked through Piatt county and on to the trading house which was twelve miles below Monticello. Upon their return they were overtaken by a hailstorm, and when they reached Mr. Moore's they were covered with the marks of the falling hailstones. Mr. Moore's sisters used to get on horses and travel to Charleston, twenty-eight miles distant, in order to receive letters from their lovers. When we asked Mr. Moore to tell us some hunting stories he exclaimed, "Oh, 'twill be useless to begin to tell my hunting excursions!" When asked how many deer he had killed in a day he said, "Only as high as seven in a day." He used to get from fifty cents to $1 for deer skins and from twenty-five cents to $1.25 for coon skins. He says that he and another man once made a bargain that they would quit hunting when they could not kill a deer a day—and they did quit. As there are four Joe Moores in Unity township, the people of that place have chosen to give the subject of our sketch the sobriquet of "Buckskin Joe." We suspect that his hunting propensities had something to do with the chosen name. Mr. Moore's eldest daughter, Mary, married Mr. Martin Parrent and went to Nebraska, where she died in 1881, leaving one daughter, Mary Ruth. William Moore lives not far from his father's residence (see his name). Robert W. Moore married Melissa Shults and lives in Unity township. Their children's names are Margaret, Oscar, Rhoda, Dora and Jessie. Nancy Moore married James Goodson and had one daughter, Harriet. Mr. Joseph Biggs became her second husband. They have one daughter and live in Douglas county. In 1864 Mr. Joseph Moore married Mrs. Thomas Wilkinson née Elitha Parrent. She came to the county in 1864. Mr. Moore helped to haul lumber for the first courthouse in Piatt county. He remembers of loaning fifty cents to one of his neighbors (the gentleman is yet one of his neighbors) with which to pay his first taxes. Mr. Moore was wounded in 1840 by a pitchfork. As a result he has lost a good portion of the bones of one hand. One glance at "Uncle Joe," as he is often called, will convince any one that he is a pioneer settler. And he is proud of having been one. Why shouldn't he be? We of a later generation often fail, no doubt, to give the pioneers due credit for all the work they accomplished—and under difficulties any of us would find it hard to overcome. They should, every one of them, feel a pride in that they have struggled through the long years and have made themselves what they are. Mr. Moore, when we went to hear him tell his old-time tales o'er, displayed to us the characteristic and genuine pioneer hospitality. As soon as he perceived us he seemed to take it for granted that we had come to spend the day. He did not use many words but in terse pioneer sentences bade us welcome. We were scarcely seated in his hewed log house when we caught a glimpse of our horses disappearing into the stable. All this took place without a word that we expected to stay more than a few minutes. When the time for departure came he bade us good-bye and invited us to return in his same characteristic way. He, and his old-time stories are known throughout the county. From all parts of the county have we been directed to be sure and see "Buckskin Joe Moore" if we desired to hear some good old tales in regard to early times in Piatt county.

MR. WILLIAM F. MOORE, farmer, was married in 1867, to Elizabeth Owen, a native of Ohio, and of Welsh descent. She died of consumption, leaving one child, Owen. Mr. Moore next married Anna Stafford, who was born in Piatt county, but was reared in Indiana. Her father, Jno. W. Stafford, was from Virginia, and her mother from Kentucky. They lived for about fifteen years in Piatt county, and both died on the place Mr. Moore lives on now. When last married Mr. Moore settled on his present home place. In 1876 he moved the house to its present position, and in 1880 built a new barn. The farm contains 400 acres, and has improved a good deal since Mr. Moore has had it in charge. Mr. and Mrs. Moore have but one child, Carry.

MR. BENJAMIN MOORE (deceased) moved to Piatt county in 1839, and settled on land which he had entered previous to his moving out from Montgomery county, Indiana. He celebrated his marriage with Sarah Monroe just previous to moving to Illinois. Friends who were coming induced Mr. and Mrs. Moore to come to Illinois. They endured many hardships and exposures when they settled in the new country. Wolves used to run chickens up to the yard fence in daylight. Mrs. Moore now lives in a log cabin built in 1841, and for which her husband hewed the logs. Mr. Moore died October 11, 1852, aged thirty-six years. They had four children, two of whom are living. Aaron went into the army for three years. Upon his return he married Martha Pervine, but died about three years after, from disease resulting from exposure in the army. Allen J. lives with his mother, and has charge of the home place. Chas. B. married Martha Shonkwiler, and lives in Unity township, on part of the land that Mr.

Moore settled on. They have two children, Adrian T. and Nellie. Ruth Ann married Geo. Wiley, and died leaving two children, Wm. and Laura.

MR. ISAAC MOORE, a farmer near Atwood, was born in Ohio in 1823. He moved from his native state to Kentucky, from there to Indiana, and thence to Piatt county about 1865. He was first united in marriage to Phebe Kelly, who died leaving one child, that also died. His second wife, née Mary Thomas, died leaving two children, Rebecca E., who has one child, and who is the wife of L. T. Hageman, a carpenter of Sullivan; and Ezra, who is still at home. He took for his third wife Mrs. Benj. Meeks née Clementine Newton, whose daughter, Anna Meeks, is still living at home. They have four children living, Chas., Bertie, Cora and Frank. Mr. Moore owns about eighty acres of land.

MR. LUTHER MOORE, a farmer, was born in 1814, in Scioto county, Ohio. His parents lived in Crawfordsville, Indiana, for a time. His father came to Piatt county and bought forty acres of land where Mr. Moore now lives. Luther came the next fall, 1837. Soon after coming to his land Mr. Moore put up a little cabin, made three or four thousand rails, fenced his land and broke it, and then, in 1840, married Mary J. Stewart, of Coles county, and went right to house-keeping. He has modified and added to his residence from time to time since, until he has the present neat house. When he first came to the county he had nothing but one sled and a horse. His orchard of about one hundred trees are from seeds which were carried from Indiana in the vest pocket. Of Mr. Moore's first wife's children, Geo. W. died in the late war; Allen married Catharine Greene, and lives in Kansas; Isaac G. married Janie Epperson, and lives in Polk county, Nebraska; Sarah J., the wife of Joseph Wiley, has two children, and lives in Sedgwick county, Kansas; Wm. H. and Hannah are twins, the former married Hester A. Taylor, has two children, and lives in Bement township; the latter married Wm. Mosbarger, a hardware merchant of Atwood, they have two children; Benjamin F., a farmer, married Julia Maxey, and lives in Unity township. Six of the first Mrs. Moore's children are dead. In 1864 Mr. Moore married Sarah E. Kearny, a native of Pickaway county, Ohio, and became a resident of Piatt county in 1861. Her mother died very suddenly in this year, and her father died in 1864. Her brothers and sisters went back to their old home in Douglas county. Since then they have become widely scattered. One sister, who has been blind for twenty years, makes her home with Mrs. Moore. The second Mrs. Moore has had six children, Mary E., Harvey L., Albert T., Marion, Oliver and Harry.

MR. PETER MAXEY, carpenter, Atwood, is a native of Kentucky, his parents' natal state. He is of French descent, his great-grandfather and grandmother on both sides came from France before the revolution and settled in Virginia. His parents moved from Kentucky to Coles county, Illinois, in 1836. Peter Maxey came to Unity township in 1858, and for a time was a farmer. He helped to build some of the first houses in Atwood. In 1851 he married Minerva Fitzpatrick, of Irish lineage and a native of West Virginia. They have had ten children, seven of whom are living. Deborah J. is the wife of Mr. L. Bishop, a mechanic in Unity township; Juda is the wife of Francis Moore, a farmer of Unity township; Laura married Thos. Cogdell, a farmer; Theodore, Cora Bell and Oliver are at home. Mr. Maxey went to the Mexican war in 1846, in Co. G (the Ottawa Co.), under Capt. Reed and Col. Newby. He was in the long, wearisome and tedious march to and from Sante Fé, New Mexico. He was in no skirmishes. He was also in the late war, starting out August 1862, in Co. H of 107th Ill. reg., and remaining nearly three years. He was not wounded, but was in the following engagements: Huff's Ferry, Campbell Station, Knoxville, Rocky-faced Mountain, Dalton, Resaca and Peach-tree Creek, at which place he was taken sick. Since writing the above, have heard of the death of Mr. Maxey, which occurred June 21, 1882. About seventy-five soldiers took part in the funeral ceremonies, commanded by Capt. Anderson of Atwood. Mr. Maxey was born in Kentucky in 1830, and has been a member of the Christian church for twenty-six years.

MR. JAMES McDOWELL (deceased) was born in 1820. He was married September 25, 1845, to Lydia McKinstry, and in 1858 moved to Decatur, Illinois. At the end of one month they moved from there to Bement, Illinois. They stayed the first night in Bement at Dr. Buckley's, and immediately put up a one-room shanty, 25×16, on the lot where Mr. T. T. Petit now lives. The next day after moving into the shanty they had ten boarders. In September they moved into a part of what is now the Bement House. Mrs. McDowell was in the hotel from this time until 1870. Mr. McDowell died November 1, 1860, leaving his property about $1,700 in debt. The money for the payment of this debt had to all be made out of the hotel, and in less than three years Mrs. McDowell paid off the debt. She says that she will always feel grateful to the people of Bement and Piatt county for their kindness in this emergency. Mr. J. Virgil McDowell married Miss Gelia McCose, of Michigan. They with their one child, Amy, make their home at Champaign, where Mr. McDowell is employed in the First National Bank. Samuel married Miss Maize McCose, of Michigan, and lives in Chicago. Mary E. married N. S. Buckner, now presiding elder in Kansas, in 1869, and died in 1870. Charles B. married Ella Felix, and is a fruit agent in New York city. He married, in 1853, Eliza Drury, who died February 29, 1881, leaving three children. William R. married Lucinda Tarrant, who died, leaving three children. Albert L., who assists his father in the merchandise business, married Mollie A. Grove, and has one child, Bertha. Elmer E. is studying telegraphy.

Danville, Andersonville and Florence. At Florence the stockade was not completed and the guards were insufficient, so that he, in company with some others, made their escape. It took them seventeen days to travel from Florence to Newburn. They swam streams and traveled by night, and even then they would have had a serious time to get through had they not been helped by negroes whom they had taken into confidence. When they got home the folks had given Mr. Merritt up as dead. He says: "All things considered, I didn't enjoy prison life very much."

MR. THOMAS MORRIS, farmer, Bement, is a native of Ireland, who came to America in 1853. In 1855 he came to Piatt county, and about fourteen years ago bought his present home-farm, which now contains 240 acres of land, which he has improved himself. The farm was bought by hard days' labor, and the improvements were made in the same manner. He was married in 1861, to Mary Connor, a native of Ireland, and has had nine children, six of whom are living, Michael, David, James, Mary, Thomas and Henry.

MR. GEORGE W. NOLIND, farmer, was born in 1822, in Pike county, Ohio. His father was a native of Pennsylvania, and his mother of Virginia. Both are dead. Lucinda married Willis Bushell and lives in Unity township; she has four children, Rosa, Lily, Leander and George. Isabel married E. R. Richey, and lives in Unity township, they have three children, Ruth E., Elmer and Noble. Both of Mr. Nolind's daughters live on his land. He improved most of the place himself. He says that at an early day here if one did not try to be a neighbor the people would make him be one. When he first settled in the county he knew everybody in Monticello, and there were no neighbors between that place and his farm near the southern county line. He was not a hunter, but once, after killing a deer, he labored under the delusion that he was, until he hunted a whole week without killing anything. At the end of this week he brought his gun to the house and hung it up, saying, "There ye'll hang till I sell you," and it did. After this the gentleman said "That's George's hunting." He acknowledges that he was a great wolf chaser, and that he could soon run down a horse while after a wolf. He "often bought a gun, but would rub it up and sell it." Mr. Nolind is a cheerful old man, and says he "never allows to get old." He has been gray-headed ever since he can remember, and has never been confined with sickness for an hour.

D. O. NOE, M.D., is a native of Missouri, and has been in the county about six years. His practice extends throughout the southern part of Piatt county and in the northern part of Moultrie county. He is kept quite busy in his work and considers that he has been successful as a practitioner. The year of 1880 passed with his losing but one or two patients, and those just at its close. Dr. Noe's specialty is with diseases of women and children. During the summer of 1881 he did not lose a single child patient. Dr. Noe is a graduate of the St. Louis Homœopathic Medical College; also of Missouri School of Midwifery, and of the St. Louis College of Homœopathic Physicians and Surgeons. He was first educated in the old school, but uses both the old and the new. He was married in 1875, to Clara Van Hook. They have one child, Stella.

MR. OLONZO NEWTON, of Hammond, put up the first residence in that place. He is a native of Virginia, from which state he moved to Ohio, and from there to Pike county, Illinois, in 1855, and thence to Piatt county in 1859. He settled first at Monticello, and for a time was clerk in a clothing store. In 1865 he married Mary J. Wilkinson, who is the mother of three children, Charles W., William Edward and Walter Bertie. Mr. Newton put up the first store in Hammond, was the first railroad agent there, and at present (1881) is running the first flax mill of the place. He was a captain in the late war. He went out in 1862, in Co. H of the 107th Ill. Inf. and served two years, but was in no engagement during the time.

MR. JOHN NIGHSWANDER, farmer, is a native of Ohio. His parents moved from Ohio to Illinois, and in 1860 he came to Piatt county. He was married in Piatt county to Sarah Fay, and has had six children, one of whom is dead; N. Alice, Flora, Charlie, Mattie and Ella. Mr. Nighswander owns eighty-five acres of land.

MR. JAS. P. OWINGS, grain buyer, is a native of Howard county, Missouri. He was in Piatt county in 1845, and in hunting some stray stock found no house between Mr. Joe Bakers, of Unity township, and Mr. Jas. Piatt's, of Monticello township. He did not settle in the state, however, till 1876, when he began dealing in stock at Atwood. He began buying grain in 1879. Mr. Owing's first wife née Mary J. Hackett, died leaving three children. He next married Elizabeth Truax, who died leaving no children. He was married again in 1879, to Mrs. Helton née Elizabeth J. Shelby, who has been a resident of the county for ten or twelve years. Mr. Owings went to the Mexican war on June 20, 1846, from Charleston, in the 3d Ill. reg., under Capt. Bishop and Col. Foreman. From the time he left New Orleans until he got back to Dallas, Texas, he had no biscuit and butter. He did not want to return by water, but finally started, and was in two storms on the Gulf. When they got off at Galveston, they were just twelve hours run from their starting place. He, Sam'l Logan, Geo. Wells, Wm. Sublet and John Foster came home then by land. The principal engagements in which he took part were those at Point Isabel and Matamoras and was ordered to Monterey, Cerro Cordo and Buena Vista. He was under the brigade commander Gen. Shields.

MR. BALTUS ORR, farmer, Hammond, is of German and Irish descent, and was born in Ohio, from which state he moved to La Salle county, Illinois. He came to Piatt county in 1865, and settled near Bement. He moved from there to his present home in Unity township in 1869. He owns 160 acres of land, which he has improved himself. Mr. Orr draws rather a doleful picture of the appearance of the surrounding country when he settled on his farm. He says deer and wolves were plenty. There was no house between his farm and Bement, and part of the time, he thinks, he could "swim a horse half-way to Bement." But now, quite happily, there is a change in the condition of affairs. Deer and wolves are exterminated, many houses have been built, and ditching has been done until most of the land is in good farming condition. In 1880 Mr. Orr's corn crop averaged sixty bushels to the acre. Mr. Orr was married in 1865, to Hannah Boring, and has one child, Addie.

MR. JOHN PEMBLE, farmer, was born in East Kent, England. When he was seventeen he came to New York. He moved from there to Michigan, and then, after traveling in the west somewhat, he settled in 1855 within nine miles of Bement, Piatt county. He was married in 1865, to Mary A. Allerton. He was in the army for three years, going out in Co. E of the 21st Ill. Corinth, Murfreesborough and Perryville were the principal battles in which he engaged. His parents lived in Cerro Gordo.

MR. J. P. PONDER, farmer, was born in 1816, in North Carolina. He first moved to Tennessee, and from there went to Kentucky, from which state he came to Piatt county in 1864. He owns 160 acres of land, besides some town property. He was married in North Carolina, to Matilda Bradford, and has had eight children, seven of whom are living. Sophronia J. married Mr. Tweed. She next married Mr. Franklin, and lives in Unity township. Naomi is living at home. Verlincia married Mr. John Edmonson, and lives in Moultrie county. James and John each own 160 acres of land. Rosetta and Marcetta are school teachers.

MR. LEVI E. HANCOCK, a farmer near Mackville, was born in Kentucky in 1823. His parents, natives of Virginia, moved to Kentucky, and from there to Indiana, where his mother, eighty-four years of age, now resides. In 1844 Levi Hancock and Mary Wheeler were married. She was a native of Kentucky, but had been living in Indiana. Five of their children are living. William H. is farming in Kansas. Alonzo is farming on the home farm. Jasper Hathaway is a farmer in Kansas. Sarah married Albert Collins, and, with her husband and two children, lives at Pekin, Illinois. Estella married John Snyder. They, with their three children, live in Kansas. Mr. Hancock moved to his present home in Piatt county in 1858. They moved in the month of February, into a little log hut on the place. The cabin was without doors, and the floor was minus. However, with a little work, they managed to remain in the house till a better one was afforded. He bought his farm in 1857, and now owns 183 acres. His present residence was built in 1871. Mr. Hancock is a member of the Masonic lodge at Bement.

MR. THEODORE J. RICHEY, a furniture dealer and insurance agent of Atwood, is a native of Sullivan county, Indiana, and is of German descent. His father is a native of Kentucky, while his mother was born in Indiana. They were married in the latter state, and moved from there to Coles county, thence to Douglas county, and then to Moultrie county, about three and one-half miles southwest of Atwood. His mother died September 15, 1867, was buried at the Harshbarger cemetery, and Mr. Livengood preached the funeral sermon. Mr. Richey, the subject of this sketch, was married April 4, 1869, to Martha Wilson, a resident of Mackville. They have had five children, three of whom, Freddie Albertus, Claudius Pearl, and Jessie Ethyl, are living. Mr. Richey lived in Mackville for about five years, and then moved to Atwood, and was the first family which lived in the place after it was made a town. He was an undertaker, a carpenter, and a painter, and was in the first mechanical shop that was ever in Atwood. It was moved thither from Mackville. Mr. Richey belongs to the Royal Templars of Temperance.

MR. NOAH RICHARDSON, farmer, Unity township, is a native of Indiana. His father was in the war of 1812. He moved to Illinois in 1857 and first settled almost on the lines of Champaign, Douglas and Piatt counties, the house being just in Champaign county. In 1858 he moved to where he now lives on the forty acres of his farm which he has not sold. In 1857 he and Emma Pratt were united in the bonds of matrimony. None of their three children are living. One daughter, however, lived to be a young lady. Mr. Richardson has been justice of the peace, was school trustee for three years, school treasurer one and a half years, and school director for twelve years.

MR. SIMON SHONKWILER, farmer, was born in Scioto county, Ohio, November 15, 1806. His grandfather emigrated from Germany to America during the revolutionary war. He had a college education of fourteen years, and at the time of his arrival in America had some kind of writing to do. Simon's father was in the war of 1812. The whole family moved from Ohio to Indiana, Putnam county, from which place Simon moved to Piatt county in 1837. In 1837 or 1838 he settled on the place where he now lives. A portion of the place was covered with heavy timber, which he cleared off, and the rest was covered with tall prairie grass. A tent against a tree sufficed as a camping place for the family until a cabin eighteen feet square was raised in the same yard where his present residence stands. The latter house is of log, is two-story, contains five large rooms in the log part, and has been built for thirty-five years. It is probably the largest log house in the county. Mr. Shonkwiler's old orchard contains the largest apple-trees that we have seen in the county. He says that some of them measure seven and one half feet in circumference. Mr. Shonkwiler was married in Indiana to Theodosia Reed, who had five children, all of whom are living. Elizabeth married Philo Wildman, has seven children and lives on a farm. Daniel is unmarried and lives at home. Mary married John Masterson, has four children and lives within three miles of Mr. Shonkwiler's. Harriet Eliza married George Smithers (now deceased), and lives in Bement; she has three children. Jacob Shonkwiler, a soldier in the late war for about three years, married Mary Masterson, has one child, and lives about one mile from Mr. Shonkwiler's. The first Mrs. Simon Shonkwiler died in 1848. In 1850 Mr. Shonkwiler married Mrs. Chas. Webster née Anna Schee. She was born in Ohio in 1825. In 1842 her parents moved to Missouri, where in 1844 she married Mr. Webster, who died in seven years, leaving her a widow with three children. Eleanor Webster married John Milliken, and lives in Milmine. Mr. West Webster married Alice McMillen, has four children and lives on the home-place. James Webster, a soldier in the late war, married Viola Holtz; she died leaving one child. Since her last marriage Mrs. Shonkwiler has had four children, all of whom are living. Jennie is unmarried and lives at home. Oliver married a Miss Griffith, and since 1875 has lived in Iowa; they have two children. Martha Shonkwiler, the wife of Chas. Moore, has two children, and lives one mile from her father's. Francis Marion Shonkwiler lives at home, but of late has been attending school at Valparaiso. Mr. Simon Shonkwiler used to be considered quite a hunter. He hunted a month in the fall for two succeeding years, and killed forty-three deer during each hunt. As we noticed the agility with which he moved about over his place in 1881, we could almost pronounce him ready for another hunt, and at a moment's notice. The energy of his early days has by no means left him. He seems to have time for no idle moments.

MR. NATHANIEL SHONKWILER came to Piatt county about 1838. He has lived in Atwood about five years, but anticipates returning to his old homestead on the farm. He was married in Piatt county, to Clarissa Harshbarger, who died. Two of her daughters are living. Mary married Isaac Barritt and lives in Unity township. She has four children, Emily, Nathaniel, John and Elizabeth. Nancy Shonkwiler married David Wither, has two children and lives near Hammond. Mr. Shonkwiler next married Sarah J. Barritt. Two children, Margaret and Ida, are living. Margaret married John Lucas, a druggist of Atwood. They have one child, Maud. Mr. Shonkwiler entered a portion of his land at Vandalia. He now owns 700 acres.

MR. WILLIAM G. SNYDER, farmer, was the fourth child of a family of twelve, was born January 19, 1832, in Scioto county, Ohio, and is of German and Welsh lineage. His parents were born in Virginia, and in childhood emigrated to Ohio. He lived in Ohio until the winter of 1854-55, when he visited Illinois, spending part of the winter on Lake Fork, in Unity township. While here he amused himself by "following the tracks of the deer, whose instinct had taught them to march before civilization; so he did nothing but obliterate their tracks in the snow." At that time prairie chickens were so plenty that "in case one failed in his own attempts at shooting, for ten cents he could buy enough of the game to give a person the impression that he was a regular Nimrod." In the spring of 1855 William G. "tried to shake the mud from off his feet and left a country which, during a part of the year at least, appeared grand in nothing but skating rinks and high-pressure wind." He started for Kansas, stopping, however, in Macoupin county to see a lady who twelve years later became his wife. While in this county he heard of "an over-production of Sharp's rifles" in Kansas, and fearing a panic he concluded to go to Ohio, where he remained, with the exception of a trip to Kansas and Missouri, until August 1861. During this summer he had his first experience as a soldier. We will relate it in his own words: "My first experience as a soldier was when I was first lieutenant of a company of home guards in the summer of 1861. We had, as I thought, about sixty of as brave boys as ever attended roll-call. We had decided on very fantastic uniforms, had them made, but had not drilled in them yet when a call was made on us to repair to Granupsburg, a little town situated on the Ohio river, about thirty miles above Portsmouth, on the Kentucky side, to drive away a brigade of rebels who were butchering men, women and children—so report had it. We were to meet at a place called Lucasville, and be transported to the river in farm wagons and proceed up the river by steamboat to drive back the invading army of the rebels. When we got ready to start from Lucasville we found that one wagon was sufficient to transport all present and able for duty. Out of the sixty members of our company, Capt. A. F. Miller, myself, Lieut. Geo. Jones and private H. J. Snyder were all that we could muster. On arriving at Portsmouth, Ohio, Col. Ragnor called for a report from Capt. Miller. He reported one private and three commissioned officers present, and fifty-six non-commissioned and privates on the sick-list. Col. Ragnor ordered us to divest ourselves of our swords and repair to the armory and be invested with a musket apiece; and that order was the destruction of as fine a military company as usually falls to the lot of anyone to command. I think they were brave—not one but would have died rather than meet the enemy or leave home at that early stage of the rebellion. Of course they were principally men who believed that the war would end in ninety days, and of course it would be foolishness for them to sacrifice their business, and probably their lives, when there were so many whose duty it was to go at their country's call." In August, 1861, Mr. Snyder enlisted in Co. G of the Ohio Vol. Inf., and went into camp at Portsmouth, Ohio, where he remained until February 12, 1862, when the company was sent to Fort Donelson, where they arrived in time to see the rebel flag hauled down, but not in time to take any active part in its capture. The following is a list of the battles in which Mr. Sny der was engaged: Pittsburg Landing, siege of Corinth, Port Gibson, Champion Hills, siege of Vicksburg, siege of Jackson, Carrion Crow Bayou, Sabine Cross-Roads, Monnett's Ferry and Snaggy Point. He served as private, corporal, orderly-sergeant and quartermaster-sergeant. He was commissioned as second lieutenant December 24, 1862, to rank as such from September 7, 1862. He was promoted and commissioned as first lieutenant September 1, 1863, to rank as such from May 16, 1863. On the 10th of August, 1864, he was promoted to captain, and on the 2d of April, 1866, he was promoted to major. His regiment was veteranized in February 1864, and was discharged from service in May 1866, at Columbus, Ohio. Mr. Snyder was married October 14, 1867, to Mary E. Weaver, of Macoupin county. They went to Ohio and lived one year, and then returned to Illinois, stopping in Champaign county, but expecting to locate in Douglas county. His wife was stricken with spotted fever and died March 17, 1868, about one month after their return to Illinois. He purchased land in Piatt county in 1868, and moved on to it the same year. On the 4th of January, 1872, he took for his second wife Mrs. T. B. Miller, née Belle Rose, of Scioto county, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Snyder have had four children, the eldest of whom were twins, and but one of the four is living, Rose Loleta. When Mr. Snyder first visited Piatt county he says one could almost swim a horse from Lake Fork to Bement. He then thought the country almost worthless; but now he owns 160 acres of land, and is fast making a nice home.

MR. BERNARD STUVE, a land owner of Piatt county, is a native of Germany, and came to America when four years old. His parents settled in Ohio, from which state he moved, finally settling in Illinois. He studied law at the Chicago Law University, and practiced at Springfield. While located at Springfield he and Mr. Alexander Davidson published, in 1877, a history of Illinois. This is a more complete history of the state than any which has ever been written, and we commend those who desire any information in regard to Illinois between the dates 1673 and 1873, to obtain and consult the work just referred to. Mr. Stuvé owns about 1,640 acres of land in Unity township. He has built upon this land the model tenant houses of the county. They are larger and more convenient than any, of our knowledge, in this county. The fact of Mr. Stuvé's having land in the county led him to move his family to Monticello and make that place his home for a short time. They now reside in St. Louis, Missouri. In March, 1857, Mr. Stuvé married Mary Illinois Wilson, daughter of Chief-Justice Wilson. They have one son and four daughters, Wilson, Mollie C., Ella Illinois, Clementina and Alice Davidson. It will not be out of place here to give a brief sketch of the life of Judge Wilson, which we will condense from Davidson & Stuvé's History of Illinois. William Wilson was born in Loudon county, Virginia, in 1795. His father died when he was very young. After clerking in a store a time, and at the age of eighteen, he began studying law under Hon. John Cook, an able lawyer of the Virginia bar. At twenty-two years of age he came to Illinois to make a home, and in a year after his coming he came within six votes of being elected associate supreme judge at the inauguration of the state government. He was soon elected as associate justice, and, at the age of twenty-nine, was elected to the honorable position of chief justice of Illinois. For nearly thirty years he held this position with great credit to himself and receiving the respect and confidence of the people. His country seat near Carmi, on the banks of the Little Wabash, was his pleasant summer resort, where he entertained royally and in the hospitable style of Old Virginia. His public career came to an end in 1848, and his death occurred April 29, 1857.

MR. J. A. SAMPSON, a harness maker of Mackville, is of English lineage, and was born in Indiana. His father was a native of Kentucky, and his mother of Virginia. They lived in Unity township for a time, but died in Indiana. Mr. J. A. Sampson came to Piatt county from Indiana in 1857, at the instigation of his brother-in-law, J. N. Terrill. He farmed until 1862, when he went to work at his trade, and in 1866 opened the first saddler shop in Mackville. He was married about 1853 to Eliza J. Robbins, who died in 1867. She had three children, two of whom are dead. Mamie married Solon Herod, of Indiana, and died leaving two children. Lola N. married John Merritt, and they, with their one child, Nina Maud, live in Atwood. Mr. Sampson married Susan Boyle about 1867. They have no children. Mr. Sampson still lives in Mackville.

MR. WILLIAM L. SHAW, a farmer of Unity township, moved from Indiana, his native state, to Shelby county, Illinois, in 1871. From this place he moved to Piatt county. He was married in 1866, to Leannah Price. They have three children living, Rosetta, Sarah Ellen and Theodore. Mr. Shaw went from Indiana to the war in Co. E of the 85th Ind., and remained from 1862 to June 1865. The principal battles he engaged in were those of Peach Tree Creek, Georgia and Fayetteville, North Carolina. He was taken prisoner at Christian, Tennessee, and was kept as such for two days. He was in Sherman's march to the sea.

MR. JACOB SPURLING, a farmer of Unity township, began his life in Old Virginia. He moved from that state to Illinois, and in 1875 settled on the place he now lives on in Piatt county. He owns 120 acres of land, upon which he has planted 150 trees and built a dwelling house. He married Miss Catherine York, and nine children have blessed their union. Eight children—Mary, Martha, James, Reuben, Louisa, William, Frank and Sydney—are living. Mr. Spurling went to the army in Co. D of the 116th Ill. Inf. The principal battles he engaged in were those of Vicksburg, Jackson and Chattanooga. He was slightly wounded four times. At the last battle mentioned he was shot across the forehead. He had some quite severe experiences in foraging expeditions. On one expedition he accidentally got in company with some rebels. As he was dressed partly in rebel and partly in Union uniform he easily made them believe he was a Southerner. After riding a time, he made some excuse to stop while the rest rode on. He then shot the horse from under one of the rebels, and, putting spurs to his horse, fled. Soon after this occurrence he was nearly overtaken by rebels, but he succeeded in keeping out of reach till he was near the Union camp, when he jumped down a fifteen-foot bluff, his horse following. He rode into camp, escaping the fire from the rebels' guns.

MR. GEORGE E. SARGENT, farmer, is a native of Peoria county, Illinois. He is of Irish and German lineage. His father, a native of Ohio, and his mother, a native of Kentucky, moved to Macon county about forty-seven or forty-nine years ago. Mr. Sargent came to Piatt county about twenty-seven years ago, but did not settle here until 1875, when he bought his present homestead. He was married in 1868, to Julia Coe, a native of Michigan, and who came to this state in 1859. They have three children, Albert D., Nancy Belle and Harry. Mr. Sargent went into the army from Coles county in Co. K, 21st Ill. reg., and again in Co. B, 55th Ill. He was out three years and three months, and was wounded at Kenesaw Mt. He has spent about ten years of his life in traveling over the United States. He has been "broke up and burned out a time or two."

DR. WILLIAM T. SMITSON, practicing physician of Atwood, is a native of Brown county, Ohio. His father, of Maryland, and his mother, of Pennsylvania, moved to Ohio in 1833, and in 1866 both died of cholera in the same state. Dr. Smitson received his medical education at a medical institute in Cincinnati, where he graduated the winter of 1867-8. He came to Piatt county in the spring of 1868 and began practicing at Mackville, from which place he moved to Atwood in 1879. He was married in 1864, to Mary E. McCord, of Cincinnati, who died in 1879, leaving three children, Ida Francis, Oscar M. and Mabel Edna. He next married Lola Mathes, on March 31, 1881. Dr. Smitson went into the army from Brown county, Ohio, in Co. H, 12th Ohio Inf. They now own 160 acres of land, all of which they have improved. Four children have blessed their union, Emery O., Alta Florence, Nora Ellen and Anna May. Mr. Smith went into the army in Co. H, 140th Ind. reg., was sergeant, and was out from 1863 to 1865, engaging in the battles of Murfreesborough and Nashville. At the former place he, with other soldiers, ate parched corn for three weeks. While in the army he helped to bury five of his bunk-mates who died from sickness and exposure.

MR. JOHN TENBROOKE, hotel-keeper, of Hammond, was born in Pennsylvania and raised in Franklin county, Indiana. His father, Abraham Tenbrooke, and mother, née Catharine Piatt, moved to Indiana in 1818. John, with his mother and sister, moved to Piatt county in 1838. In 1839 he built and opened the first hotel proper in Monticello. At first the hotel was composed of one log room and a shed addition. It was afterward remodeled and contained seven or eight rooms. Mr. Tenbrooke was married in 1840, to Aldula Sadorus, and in 1850 he sold out, left Monticello and moved to Sadorus Grove, where he lived until his wife's death in 1853. In 1865 he went to Decatur for a short time, but returned to Sadorus Grove and bought a farm. He next moved to Urbana. In 1871 he built a house near the college grounds in Urbana. August 2, 1876, he had his right arm crushed in the horse-power of a threshing machine, near Voorhies Station. Dr. T. A. Collett, of Lovington, Illinois, a graduate of the Michigan University at Ann Arbor, assisted by Drs. Parker and Vance, of Bement, amputated the arm at the shoulder joint at 8 A.M. August 3, 1876.

In Kentucky he united his life with that of Mary J. Burk, of the same state. They have had seven children. John is married and lives in Missouri. Clarissa married Dr. Noe, of Hammond. Marion P. is in business in the post-office. The remaining members of the family are Balus, Mary, Jane, and an infant.

MR. ELIJAH WILDMAN, farmer, near Atwood, was born in Ohio in 1828. His father, of Pennsylvania, and mother, of New York, moved to Ohio, thence to Indiana, and then to Douglas county, Illinois. He came to this county first when thirteen years old, but did not make it his home until he was twenty-three years old. He first bought land west of Mackville and then moved on to his present home place. He was married in 1854, to Melvina J. Cain, a native of Indiana. They had fourteen children, twelve of whom are living. Sarah E. married James Skidmore, a farmer. They have two children, Tilman and Lillie. The remaining names of the living children are Will D., Albert A., Benjamin F., Clarissa E., Mary E., Charles E., named for Judge Emerson, Elijah Q., named for great-grandfather in the revolutionary war, and Jurmana and Jurda, twins. Mr. Wildman is a member of the Christian church.

MR. JAMES WHARTON, farmer, is of English and German lineage, and was born in Pennsylvania. Mr. Wharton came from Pennsylvania to Bureau county, Illinois, in 1854, and in 1860 moved to Bement, Piatt county, and began clerking in Mr. McDowell's hotel there. In 1864 he married Mrs. McDowell, and took charge of the hotel. In 1870 he moved out of the hotel into another house in Bement, and the next move was to the farm of 120 acres he now lives on. Mr. and Mrs. Wharton have two sons, Frank A. and George Le Sure.

MR. JAMES WILSON is a native of Ohio, moved from there to Indiana, then to Piatt county about 1860, and located in Unity township, where he remained with the exception of one year. He was married in Indiana, to Nancy Owen, a native of that state, and five of their seven children are living. Columbus married Margaret Noland, lives in Atwood, owns three lots and a residence, and is a painter. Martha is the wife of Mr. Ritchey (see his sketch). Mary married W. F. Stovall, lives in Douglas county, and has two children. Thomas A. is in partnership with Mr. Ritchey, and is a member of the Royal Templars of Temperance and Masonic lodge. Miss I. D. Wilson is at home.

MR. JOHN R. WORTHAM, a merchant of Hammond, moved from Kentucky, his native state, to Illinois in 1868, and in 1873 settled in Hammond, Piatt county. In September of the same year he began merchandising in a new building which he had erected. He was married February 14, 1861, in Coles county, to Susan J. Abell. She died, leaving four boys, William L., Jessie L., Horace L. and Evan L., all of whom are at home. He next married Sarah E. Butz, née Kizer, who has had three children, Edna L., Roy L. and Emma Lena.

MR. EPHRAIM WITHERS (deceased), farmer, was a native of North Carolina. He moved from there to Arkansas, and from that state to Springfield, Illinois, and in 1866 moved to Unity township. He was married in North Carolina, to Sarah Berry, who survives her husband. He died in 1881. They had seven children, four of whom are living. Seborn S. was in the late war. He married Emily Torrance, has three children, Allie, Lillie and Hattie, and lives on a farm in Unity township. Newton was also a soldier. His wife, née Sarah Adams, is dead. David married Nancy Shonkwiler, has two children, Alma A. and Sarah J., is a farmer, and owns 120 acres of land. Catharine married William Welch, a farmer, has five children, and lives in Kansas.

MR. REUBEN WILLEY, a grocer and grain merchant of Pierson, is a native of Hamilton county, Ohio. He moved from there to Christian county, Illinois, in 1853. He was a merchant in Arcola, Douglas county, for a time, and then moved, in 1877, to Pierson. He opened the first store and grain office in the place, and for two years was the only person in business there. He was virtually the first postmaster in the place, there being one for only a few weeks previously. He has been notary public and has been township clerk for two years. He was married in 1879, to Mary N. Hunt, of Danville, Pennsylvania. They have one child, Frank R. Mr. Willey owns 120 acres of land in the vicinity of Pierson. His dwelling house was begun in 1875, and was the first house near the switch.

MR. CHARLES WEAVER is a native of Pennsylvania, and moved from there to Piatt county, Illinois, in 1877. He first lived on Dr. Noecker's place, and in 1881 moved to Pierson. He is the first person to live in the laid-out town of Pierson. He was married in 1871, to Lizzie Hunt, and has four children, Carrie, Jennie, Ella and Grace.

MR. JOSEPH W. ZORGER, farmer, Voorhies station, was born in this county, Monticello township, in 1848, and has lived here all his life except a few years. He owns a farm of eighty acres in Unity township, upon which he has put all improvements, built a dwelling house, planted about two hundred trees, and has it well fenced and in a good condition. He was married in 1873, to Cordelia A. Fisher, a native of Green county, Illinois. Mr. Zorger is a member of Bement I.O.O.F. His father, Henry Zorger, deceased, was a native of Pennsylvania, moved from there to Macon county, thence to Piatt county, and settled at an early time at what is now Mr. McIntosh's mill. He owned the mill and lived there for a number of years, and in 1854 moved to Monticello, where he died in 1855. Mr. Zorger was married in Pennsylvania, to Elizabeth Spangler, whose father built Spangler's mill in Macon county. She died, leaving eight children: Sarah, who is the wife of Charles Haggerty, lives in Fulton county, and has three children; Jacob married Margaret Miller, lives in De Witt county, and has a family of children; Emanuel married, and died, leaving one child; Kate, who married Mr. Benjamin, is now in Macon county, and was formerly a teacher in this county; George was in Colorado when last heard from; Mary married Richard Ratcliffe, lives in Woodford county, and has three children; Susan is a school teacher, and lives with her sister Sarah; Joseph W.; Isaiah is married, lives in Champaign county, and has two children. Mr. Henry Zorger married his second wife, Mrs. Nevill, who died a year after he did, leaving two children by her first husband.

CHAPTER XVII.

CERRO GORDO TOWNSHIP.

THIS township is seven miles wide and eight and one-half miles in length, thus containing fifty-nine and one-half sections of land. Almost the entire township is prairie land, a few groves in the southern part being about all the natural timber the township contains. With the exception of the extreme southwestern and northwestern corners of the township the land seems perfectly flat, it being just slightly rolling, however, in the parts mentioned. The main drainage of the land is toward the south. A small branch of the Okaw rises in the southwestern part of the township and flows southeast. Cerro Gordo township is composed of good rich farming land. It already contains some of the most productive farms of the county; and now that a great deal of artificial draining is being done, it will soon contain a goodly number of the best farms that the county affords.

In regard to the name of the township, we have had two versions given as to its origin. One is that Col. Williams, who bought a large tract of land in the eastern part of the township and lived there a number of years, was noted for his deeds in the Mexican war, and that he was thus given the sobriquet of Cerro Gordo Williams. As he was the largest land-holder in that vicinity, it was not strange that it was supposed that when the townships were organized the name of Cerro Gordo was given on his account.

At the time of the Mexican war a postoffice in Mr. Geo. Peck's house, which was on the old stage route from Urbana to Decatur, was named Cerro Gordo, in memory of the battle of that name. After the railroad, now known as the Wabash, was built, the postoffice was moved to the same, and ultimately the town was called Cerro Gordo. When the townships were organized it is quite likely that the name of the principal town was given to the township. We think that this latter version in regard to the name is the most plausible.

Cerro Gordo township has two railroads and four stations. The Wabash railroad enters the township at the northeastern corner, extends southwest, leaving the township about two miles south of the northwest corner. Milmine and Cerro Gordo are situated on this road, while Lintner and La Place are on the road formerly known as the Indianapolis, Decatur & Springfield, and which passes from east to west about one-half a mile from the southern boundary line.

Early settlement.—The Cunninghams settled at seven mile or Cunningham grove at quite an early day, at least previous to the sudden freeze in 1836, and they had some neighbors whose names we could not learn. This grove alluded to is near La Place. Messrs. Joseph, Isaac and Daniel Howell, and John Sea, were the first people who settled in the vicinity of Cerro Gordo. With the exception of these people, there were not many who came to the township before the railroad was built. Soon after the building of this road, settlements began to be made at Cerro Gordo. One of the first deaths in the township was that of Wm. Lee, who lived near Mr. Jos. Howell's.

Cerro Gordo.—This town was originally named Griswold, but when the post-office was moved to the station from Mr. Peck's house in Willow Branch township, it retained the name of Cerro Gordo, and soon the name of the town was changed. The town was not incorporated for a number of years after the station was made.

Mr. McMurray was reported to us as being the first station agent of the place. The section house for railroad hands was the first building in the town. Andrew McKinney was the first postmaster, and put up the first dwelling house, and Andrew McKinney and A. L. Rodgers in 1856 had the first general merchandise store of the place. Wm. Cole and Mr. Sawyer were also among the first to put up dwelling houses. The first death in the town we could learn of was that of Eugene, a little son of Mr. Denman, who died in 1856 from the effects of a rattlesnake bite. The first birth was reported as that of Mr. Dunbar's child. Among the first marriages, if not the very first, was that of Isaac McKinney and Miss Campbell. John Prosser was the first physician and John Fields the first blacksmith we have any note of. Jno. Garver and Mr. Green were the first teachers in the new school building, which was built about 1866. The first church was built in 1857, and was dedicated by Mr. Campbell. The mill now used by Mr. Pitts was put up about 1859.

Cerro Gordo in 1858 contained only about two business houses and probably only a dozen residences. For quite awhile after the war Cerro Gordo was at a standstill, but within the last few years it has taken a new start and is now improving quite fast. There are about twenty-five business firms in the place now, and it is anticipated that the town will make steady improvement from this on. It now has about 700 inhabitants. It is well supplied with trees and contains a neat little park. Nowhere in the county were we met more cordially than by the people of Cerro Gordo. This town was the first in the county to vote against liquor license, and the residents see no cause to regret the fact that it has been a temperance town for some fifteen to eighteen years.

Presbyterian church.—This Presbyterian church was really organized across the river, in Willow Branch township, and in a school building, by Father Kingsbury, of Danville, and the church was known as the Liberty Prairie church. Meetings continued to be held there until Wesley chapel, in Macon county, was built, when the society met in that. About this time most of the members moved into Cerro Gordo and in a little while after the church in that town was started. For a time the meetings were held in the school-house, but ere long land was bought and the present building was erected about 1860. Originally the congregation was of good size, but now there are probably not over twenty-five members. There is no regular minister, but Mr. Ringland, from Bement, preaches occasionally. Mr. J. C. Campbell was the first located minister of the church, and he was followed by Mr. McMurray. The Presbyterian church building was used by various denominations. Mr. John McKinney was largely instrumental in the building of the church.

Methodist church.—This church building was erected about 1866 by Mr. John Smith, and elder Buck dedicated it. At present it is a part of a circuit and has a membership of nearly one hundred persons. Mr. Smart is the minister, and his circuit includes in addition Ridge Chapel, Pleasant View and La Place. The Sunday school was organized about 1868.

Temperance society.—The Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized about May 20, 1881, by Miss Pitts, of Mansfield, Illinois. The officers elected were Mrs. E. H. Jeffres, president; Mrs. J. Garver, vice-president; Mrs. J. A. Replogle, secretary, and Mrs. W. F. Donaldson, treasurer. The Union held four meetings and then adjourned during the hot weather. Smallpox broke out at this time in the town and withal the society was so affected that few meetings have been held since. Mrs. Villars lectured May 3. Good work, however, it is anticipated will be done.

German Baptists.—This sect appeared in America in 1719. About twenty families landed in Philadelphia at this time and settled in various parts of Pennsylvania. This society is similar to the Friends, in that they use great plainness of dress, take no oaths and do not go to war. A member of this church told us that "the Testament is our discipline," and that their belief is "faith, repentance and baptism," and that upon this salvation is dependent. They believe in triune immersion and in observing all the commandments in the New Testament. The ministers are elected from the congregation, as are also visiting members or deacons, who attend to the church matters and make preparation for communion service. The elders are the heads of the church. There are three degrees in the ministry, and when a man is to be installed in the first degree he is brought forward with his wife and installed by the men with hand and kiss and the wife with the hand to the minister and hand and kiss to the women. The minister of the first degree has only the power to preach, while he of the second degree is installed in the same manner and has power to preach, baptize and marry. An elder is installed by the laying on of hands and prayer by other elders, has power to preach, baptize and marry, and liberty to go where he pleases. An elder, only, can organize a church. The number of elders of a church varies according to circumstances. The Lord's supper is commemorated yearly, in memory of the coming of Christ; and as a commandment at these meetings, they first have feet washing, then the Lord's supper of bread and wine. The occasion is a somewhat sociable one, and not necessarily solemn.

There are three churches or congregations of this sect in Piatt county. The first was organized in 1856 or 1857, in Macon county, and was known as the Cerro Gordo church. Mr. and Mrs. David Kuns were the first members of this church, next Mr. Kuns' brother, and gradually the congregation grew to a good-sized church. In 1865 or 1866 the church was divided and three congregations were organized. Each congregation has its own quarterly councils for the settlement of business. The southern district of Illinois has started an Orphan's Home, which is located in Macon county, near Cerro Gordo. There are eighty acres of well improved land, and a good house and barn belonging to the Home. This Orphan's Home is in the Cerro Gordo congregation, as is also the first church building which was erected in Macon county. The organization was started through the influence of Mr. David Kuns, Mr. Metzger and Mr. Replogle. The church building in Cerro Gordo, which cost near $2,000, was built about 1878, and was donated, with the ground it stands on, by Mr. Metzger. This was certainly a great gift, and the congregation should feel very grateful for it. There are near 250 members in the Cerro Gordo congregation. The names of the deacons, as given to us by Mr. J. P. Replogle, are Stephen Shively, J. P. Replogle, Solomon Hufferd, John Hickman, John Blickenstaff and David Blickenstaff. The names of the ministers are John Metzger, David Troxel, A. F. Snider, Amos Nickey, Adam Bingeman and V. B. Clifton. The membership of the Milmine congregation is about seventy-five or eighty, and the Sunday school, which has been in existence about four years, has an attendance of from forty-five to fifty members. The ministers of this congregation are D. B. Gibson, Menno Stauffer, Henry Kuns and Daniel Mohler; and the deacons are Benj. Bowman, David Kuns and John S. Kuns. The congregation has but one building, but meetings are held both in Milmine and in the country, where Henry Kuns donated one and a half acres of land, upon which the church, which cost $2,600, is located.

The Okaw congregation has a membership of about 200, and a large church building was erected about 1875. Mr. Peter Fouts is of the opinion that Jacob Wagoner was the first German Baptist minister who preached in this church, and that Robert Miller dedicated the same. The building is 40×60 feet and cost near $3,500, which amount was raised by subscription. The following are the names of the ministers as given to us by Mr. Replogle: Jacob Wagoner, Jacob Ulrey, Jacob Miller, John Arnold and Philip Siders. The deacons are Geo. Funk, Elijah Hendricks, Isaac Ulrey, Solomon Miller, Peter Cripe, Isaac Shively and Charles Dicks. The people belonging to these congregations are some of the best citizens—most peaceful and industrious—that our county affords. The majority of them have good farms, which under their able management yield bountifully. Some of the finest country houses and barns in the county belong to the German Baptists, or Dunkards, as they are wrongly called. We found many of these people hospitable in the extreme, and we are glad to have this opportunity of saying so, and to show to the people of the county some of the work that has been done by them.

La Place.—This town was laid off in 1873, and was named by G. W. Stoner. Before this name was decided upon the place was called indiscriminately Gatewood and Stoner. Eighty acres of land are laid off into town lots in a very attractive section of the township. The ground is rolling and a small stream, Bonnie Brook, runs through the town and into the west branch of the Okaw. In fact the location for the town is as pretty as any spot in the county. La Place is considered a very healthy place. In the year of 1881, however, there probably occurred more deaths than in any previous year. The first house on the section upon which the town is located was built about 1860 by Tho. B. Warfield, and is now owned by the Gatewood heirs. The hotel kept by William Eicholtz was the first house built within the limits of the town. The barn was first erected and the family lived in it until the hotel building was erected about 1874. Jacob Reedy was the first postmaster of the town, and A. H. Locke is the present postmaster. Dr. Pierson was the first physician of the town, and he and Miss Reedy were the first couple married. The town contains about 250 inhabitants, and the business firms number about a dozen. There are a number of good farms in the vicinity. Bonnie Brook farm owned by G. W. Stoner, is especially noted for its stock. The trotting horses are of the Hambletonian, Clay, trotting Normans, and Mambrino stock. The introduction of these horses has done very much to advance the grade of horses in the county. Mr. Stoner also keeps a good grade of hogs.

Churches.—According to Mr. A. S. Hawthorne, the Methodist Episcopal church was organized in the fall of 1874, at the school-house near La Place. Five persons—Henry L. Kuns and wife, William Carter, and A. S. Hawthorn and wife—constituted the membership. La Place circuit was formed at the annual conference of 1876, and W. A. Reynolds was sent as minister. During a revival held by him the membership became eighty-five instead of five. The Methodist Episcopal church was erected in 1877, and dedicated in June by Rev. Barnes. It is Mr. George C. Wagner's opinion that the present Methodist Episcopal church was organized in 1873, by Mr. Austin, of Cerro Gordo, who was the first stated supply. P. A. Swart, of Cerro Gordo, is the present minister.

Milmine or Farnsworth.—The town of Farnsworth was laid out by Enos Farnsworth, and surveyed by Mr. C. D. Moore. It received its name in honor of the former person, who owned the town plat, a good deal of land in the vicinity, and who put up the first residence in the town. Mr. Farnsworth sold the whole town plot to Messrs. Geo. Milmine and David Kuns, and made the deed to Emma G. Milmine and Margaret Kuns, their wives. Milmine and Bodman owned the first store which was kept by Mr. E. B. Sprague, now of Bement. The post-office, which is now kept by Hiram Barber, is named Milmine, we suppose in honor of Mr. George Milmine, and of late years the name is used to designate the town more than Farnsworth is. Mr. Kuns owns a warehouse and an elevator in the place. Mr. J. O. Sparks has the principal grain office of the town. The town has a population of about 200, contains several business houses, a union church and a fine brick school-building which was built about 1872, and which contains two large rooms. Milmine was the scene of quite a serious railroad accident in the summer of 1882. A freight train ran into another train right at the station. Several cars and the depot building were badly damaged, a number of cattle were killed, and several of the train men were so severely injured that they died.

Milmine church.—The Milmine Christian church was organized in the spring of 1879, and the meetings are held in the union church of the village. At the time of the organization there were fifteen charter members, but before the meeting closed there were fifty-six in membership, and now the number is increased to about ninety-six. The church owns a parsonage in Milmine, a half interest in the Ridge chapel, and the Sangamon church on Willow Branch. Mr. Robert Harris is the first regular minister. John Biebinger and Henry Taylor are deacons, Isaac Peck is clerk, and John Biebinger, Isaac Peck and Mr. B. Middleton are trustees of the parsonage.

Lintner.—This is a small station on the Indianapolis, Decatur & Springfield railroad. It was named for William Lintner, of Decatur, who owned some 800 acres of land in the vicinity. It has a postoffice and a good general merchandise store, and being in the center of a good farming district, a great deal of grain is shipped from the station.

CHAPTER XVIII.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MR. SCOTT ARMSWORTH, farmer, Cerro Gordo, was born in Virginia, September 9, 1806. His parents moved when he was just three weeks old to Ohio, where he was reared. When Scott was eighteen years old his father died and the family concluded to sell out and go to Illinois. After the sale each had about $400. Four of the children and the mother finally came to this county. Now all are dead except Mr. Scott Armsworth. Samuel Armsworth came to the county about 1838, married Miss Ater, and settled on the north side of the river, in Willow Branch township. Two of his sons, James and Noah, are still living in the township. Rebecca Armsworth was the wife of Abraham Ater, and they came to the county about 1838. He died the next year, while she lived until 1847. Catharine moved with her mother to Piatt county some time between 1838 and 1845. She married George Matchler and settled on what is now the Allerton place. She died January 12, 1847, and her mother died while visiting relatives in Indiana. Mr. Scott Armsworth first moved on to his farm in Willow Branch township in 1845, having bought 120 acres of land, to which he added more later, now having about 360 acres of land, upon which he has put all the improvements. He built his farm residence in 1850. It has since been altered and now contains four good sized rooms. He was married April 14, 1840, and has had six children, but one of whom, Willis, is living. Ann married George Still and died in 1879, having had three children, Leona, Noah and Samuel. Mr. Armsworth recently moved into Cerro Gordo, where he owns three business houses, one of which is brick, and two residences.

MR. PETER ADAMS, a farmer, was born in Kentucky in 1818. He moved from his native state to Ohio and from thence to Illinois, and in 1839 came to Piatt county. He first settled on Willow Branch, where he found very few settlers. He moved to his present home in Cerro Gordo township in 1849. He owns 120 acres of land, which he improved himself, and upon which he has planted at least three hundred trees. Mr. Adams was married in 1845, to Sarah J. Peck. Two of their children are living, Angelo, who married Mary A. Ater, and David S., who lives at home. In 1868 Mr. Adams took for his second wife Rebecca Johnston, a native of North Carolina. They have no children. Mr. Adams has held the offices of school director and road commissioner.

MR. JOSEPH AUTEN, stock dealer, Cerro Gordo, is a native of Ohio and was reared in Pennsylvania. He moved from Pennsylvania to Illinois in 1851 and to Piatt county in 1856, and lived in Willow Branch and Cerro Gordo townships until he moved into town in 1872. He had previously moved to town in 1856, when he remained two years. Among Mr. Auten's first farming enterprises he hauled corn to Cerro Gordo at ten cents a bushel and sold it in the field for eight cents. It is pleasing to note the various changes and improvements since then. Mr. Auten was assessor of the township and belongs to the Cerro Gordo Masonic lodge No. 600. He was married in 1858, to Sarah McKinney, and has three sons: Frank, who taught as first assistant in the Cerro Gordo schools this past year, and Charley and John at home.

MR. STILLMAN BARBER, formerly of Milmine, now of Gonzales, Texas, is a native of Rhode Island, which state his grandfather and two uncles helped to stake out. He was born in 1821, and in 1857 moved to Piatt county, Illinois. He lived, however, near Carlinville, Illinois, previous to moving to Piatt county. When he first settled here he bought land where Mr. Henry Kuns lives and began making extensive improvements. At the time of his settling on it there was not a stick of wood on the place, but he soon had out a forty-acre apple orchard, which has yielded as high as a thousand bushel of apples a year. He set out two other orchards before leaving the county. After living about eight years on the farm Mr. Barber moved into Milmin, where he resided until 1875, when he went to Texas. While in Milmine Mr. Barber kept a store, was railroad agent and bought grain. He was also school director, treasurer and justice of the peace. He can justly be called one of the most energetic men of the county. Mr. Barber came to Illinois a bachelor, but was married in Madison county to Mrs. Mary A. Murphy née Mary Clark, who had had four children, three of whom are living. John Murphy married Sarah Hays, has one child, Jno. Delmer, and lives on a farm north of Bement. Julia A. Murphy is not married and makes her home with her brother John. Robert married Mary Barber, has three children, James, George and Charles, and lives in Unity township. Mr. Barber has had seven children, five of whom are living. Katie S. married Thomas W. East in 1873, has had three children, Victor, Herbert and Arthur, and lives near Milmine. She was bookkeeper in her father's store for several years. Mr. East has put most of the improvements on his 140 acres of land. He has a cottonwood and a maple grove of about six hundred trees. Margaret Barber attended the State Normal for one term and then studied at the State University at Champaign for two terms. She is now teaching at Luling, Texas. Moses, Ida and Clark are attending college near their home in Gonzales, Texas.

MR. HIRAM BARBER, merchant and postmaster, Milmine, is a native of Rhode Island. He moved from there to Piatt county in 1858, settling two miles west of Milmine. He owned a farm of 136 acres, which he broke, fenced and improved himself. He sold this and bought a farm of 160 acres joining Milmine, part of which was improved when he purchased it. In 1879 he bought a lot, store and goods, and has since been a merchant. Mr. Barber was married in 1846, to Susan E. Sherman, who died, leaving two children: Mathew S., who married Jennie Stanton and lives in Kansas; Susan A., who is the wife of Wm. Briggs, lives in Chicago and has two children. At Mr. Barber's second nuptials, in 1857, he married Mary F. Briggs.

MR. F. A. BOWDLE, farmer, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Illinois in 1862. In 1868 he settled on his present home-place of 160 acres, upon which he has made all improvements. He was married in Ohio, to Catherine Willis, who died in 1860, leaving eight children, seven of whom are living. Sally E. is living at home. Wm. married Lucy McDonald, of Pennsylvania, and lives in Cerro Gordo township; they have two children, Frank A. and Jennie. Josephine married Daniel Immel, and with one child lives in Macon county. J. W. married Maria Corman, has one child, Herbert, and lives in Cerro Gordo township. Maria C. married Uleric Born, and has one child, Selah. Emma J. is the wife of Mr. Humer. Mary is living at home. Mr. Bowdle has been school director for four years. He thinks that their neighborhood has changed somewhat in regard to morals since he first came into it. Now the people do seem to know what Sunday is, while some years ago all days seemed the same. He considers this county one of the finest he has ever seen.

MR. BENJAMIN BOWMAN, a farmer, is a native of Ohio. He moved from his native state when quite young, and was reared in Indiana. He moved to Piatt county, Illinois, in 1865, and settled on the place of eighty acres which he has principally improved, and which he now lives on. He was married in Ohio, to Mary A. Laird, and has had four children, three of whom are living, Silas M., Anna Eliza and Della. Mr. Bowman is a member of the German Baptist church.

MR. JONATHAN BURNS, a farmer of Cerro Gordo township, is a native of Scott county. He moved from there to Macon county, and from thence to Piatt county in 1866. He lived in Bement township for a time, but for the last nine years has been in Cerro Gordo township, where he owns eighty acres of land, upon which he has made some improvements. He was married to Francis V. Burrows, of Scott county. They have had eight children, seven of whom, Chas. R., Alice M., Tho. W., Frederic F., Daniel, Jennie P. and Carrie are living. Mr. Burns went to the army from Scott county, in Co. F of the 61st Ill. He was out nearly four years, but was never wounded. He served as second and first lieutenant, and was veteranized. He took part in the following engagements: Shiloh, Vicksburg, Mechanicsburg, Little Rock, Murfreesborough and The Cedars. Mr. Burns once had a narrow escape from bushwhackers in the grand prairie of Arkansas. He with others were out deer hunting, when they suddenly found themselves in the midst of their enemy. By a little maneuvering they escaped from the bushwhackers, who luckily were attracted elsewhere.

SQUIRE E. A. BARNWELL, Cerro Gordo, was born near Nashville, Tennessee. He moved from that state to Macon county in 1833. His father was then one of the early settlers of that county. His father was on a war vessel in the war of 1812. Mr. Barnwell lived in Macon most of the time previous to his coming to Piatt county. He lived there continuously from 1856 until 1874, when he settled in Cerro Gordo. After locating in this town he followed photography for a time, and now for the last six years has been police magistrate of the place. He has also held the office of town clerk for four years. He is a member of the Masonic lodge, and has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal church since 1846. He owns a house and lot in Cerro Gordo. In 1881 the residence was remodeled, and it now contains seven rooms. Mr. Chambers is one of the few old settlers who seems not to long for the "good old times." He is very glad that he does not now have to go through what he once did; that the market places are nearer than Springfield and Chicago. CHAPTER XIX.

WILLOW BRANCH TOWNSHIP.

PART of this township is situated just west of Monticello township. It contains fifty-nine and one-half sections of land, and is one of the finest townships in the county. The land is part rolling, and there is a good portion of prairie and timber land. The Sangamon river, which runs diagonally from northeast to southwest through about the middle of the township, drains the entire township. The ridge, which has been before alluded to, crosses the lower part of the township. Mr. Elijah Taylor says that a point of this ridge, not far from his home, is considered the highest point of land along the Wabash railroad, between the Wabash river and the Illinois river. The bluffs along the Sangamon in this township are in some places of good size. Those known as Cedar Bluffs contain, as far as we have heard, the only cedar trees in the county. In addition to the well-timbered land which borders the streams there is a goodly portion of fine farming land. The northwestern part of the township for a number of years was swampy, but of late years the draining done by the farmers is fast making every foot of land tillable.

Wolf run and Wild Cat creek are the principal tributaries to the Sangamon from the north. It is supposed that Wolf run obtained its name from the fact that wolf dens were frequently found in its banks, and because several wild cats were found near the other stream it thus received its name. Willow branch is the main tributary from the south and it is supposed that it received its name from the fact that a large willow tree used to stand near the place where the stream was most frequently forded. It is supposed that the township took its name from this stream.

Willow Branch township has but one railroad—that which was until lately known as the Champlain & Decatur road. There are two stations on this road, Allerton and Cisco. The former is but a small station on the land owned by Mr. Samuel Allerton, of Chicago. There is also a switch on the road known as the Wild Cat switch, from which point grain is shipped.

In regard to the early settlers of Willow Branch we will simply mention the names. Further particulars will, in general, be found in their personal sketches. The Aters and Pecks, Armsworths, Wm. Madden, Jno. West, Sam'l D. Havelly, Michael Dillow, George Widick, Peter Croninger, Henry Adams, and a number of others. Mr. Edward Ater taught the first school in the township. Mr. Geo. Widick made brick near Monticello as early as 1842, and Willow Branch has the first brick house, owned by one of the Aters, built in the county.

A lane running across the northern part of the township has long been known as Stringtown lane. Most of the early settlements in that part of the township were built on or near this lane. A portion of the northwestern part of the township has been styled Kentucky, we suppose because some of the settlers in that vicinity were from the state of that name.

Other lanes in the southeastern part of the township are called Christian and Cow lanes.

Many of the early settlers of the township have passed away, but some still remain. The township is proud of all their pioneer settlers, and justly feel that they did a noble work when they began to make settlements in Willow Branch.

Cisco.—This is a small town, but is improving all the time. The depot was built in 1874, and E. F. Dallas was the first grain merchant and ticket agent. E. F. Dallas was the first grocer of the place, but Oscar Harper soon bought him out, and was the first postmaster of the town. Mr. Dallas and Dr. Caldwell were about the first business men of the place. Washington Nebaker kept the first drygoods store in 1874, while Walker and Carter had the first hardware store. James Glick was the first blacksmith, J. B. Hamilton the first druggist, and

Dr. Weinstein the first physician. Before the station was made Mrs. Tho. Watrous was probably the first person who died there. After the station was located Etta Clothier was probably the first one who died, and Chas. Clothier was probably the first birth.

One version in regard to the name of the town is, that one of the men on the surveyors corps had been on the Union Pacific survey, and that he named the town for a town in Nevada so named. Cisco has a population of over two hundred, contains a Methodist church building, which was erected about 1875, at the cost of near $2,200, a public hall, one hotel and two boarding houses. There is one lodge of Knights of Red Cross, an Odd-Fellows lodge and a Good Templars lodge. Cisco contains about twenty business firms and is quite a thriving little village. Wm. H. Telford has the largest business house of the place and Samuel Nogle keeps the hotel. Mr. Winterbottom was the first minister located at Cisco, but he also had "The Chapel" in charge.

Churches.—The Sangamon church building was erected about 1869 and dedicated to the Christians, but the Baptists own a portion of the church.

Ridge chapel was built in 1868, on land donated by Mr. David Moyer. Several denominations hold service there.

In regard to the United Brethren and Centenary church, we can give no further items than have already been given.

CHAPTER XX.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MR. BENNETT ARMSWORTH, farmer, Milmine, was born in Ohio in 1828. In 1844 he came to Piatt county, and lived with Mr. Scott Armsworth several years. He was stage driver for a time on the state road between Decatur and Mahomet, and again he drove a stage between Springfield and Peoria. This was his last driving, and, strange to say, while on this road he had his first "upset," and two young ladies, who were pitched into a ditch, were the victims of his probably careless driving. After his career as stage driver was over he went to Ohio for a year, but came back to this county, and for nine successive seasons fed cattle. During this time he drove several lots of cattle to Ohio. He was married in 1855, to Martha Ater, a native of Ohio, and has had ten children, all of whom are living. Effie is keeping house for her uncle, Thomas Ater. The names of the other children are Charles, Frank, Emma, Mary, Elizabeth, Sarah, Josephine, James, Bennett and Margaret. In the spring of 1856 Mr. Armsworth moved onto his present home-place of 160 acres. He has put all the improvements on this place, including the fencing of it, both open and tile ditching, and the planting of at least 300 trees. The present residence was built about 1867. Mrs. Armstrong owns eighty acres in the township. Upon our asking Mr. Armsworth for any unusual incidents which had occurred under his notice, he related a little experience he had in 1862 with a cattle thief. One night he was roused by a man driving cattle, who wanted him to take the cattle to Decatur. Mr. Armsworth first refused, but afterward consented, and it was arranged that he would meet the man at Decatur at a certain place and hour. He fulfilled his part of the contract, but did not find the man as anticipated. After getting permission to put the cattle in the depot pens he searched the city for his man, but failed in the attempt, when upon going back to the pens he saw a man slipping away. He called and finally overtook the man, who paid him for his trouble, and excused his tardiness with the plea of sickness. Mr. Armsworth went home, and not long after the same man called at his house at midnight to inquire the way to Decatur. It is Mr. Armsworth's belief that the man at that time had Mr. Daniel Stickle's cattle in his possession. Again Mr. Armsworth saw the thief at Bement and tried to prevail on the constable to arrest him. The man was caught at last, however, though not in this county, and let us believe that justice was rendered him.

MR. NOAH ARMSWORTH, farmer, Cisco, is a native of Piatt county. He married Eliza Gulliford in 1870, and has had three children, two of whom are still living, Elizabeth and Charity Lulu. He owns a farm of 160 acres, upon which he has made many improvements. He built quite a nice seven-room brick residence about seven years ago, has planted about seventy-five trees, and has done some tile draining. Mr. Armsworth did not escape being school director for about six years.

MR. FRANK ATER, farmer, Milmine, is a native of Ohio, and came, when fifteen years old, with his father to Illinois. He lives on the 169 acres of land which fell to his share from his father's estate. It was but little improved, however, when it came into his possession. He has planted hedges, made both open and tile ditches, and built both barn and house. The latter was rebuilt in 1879, and now contains six rooms and presents a very pleasant appearance. Mr. Ater planted out 300 fruit trees in addition to about 100 other trees. His wheat crop in 1881 averaged twenty-one bushels to the acre, which was an unusual crop for the season. In 1863 Mr. Ater and Eliza J. McArty, a native of Ohio, were united in marriage. Three of their five children are living, Adella May, Jennie Belle and Bertha Frances. These three girls have begun their musical education in a somewhat rigid manner. During their first term the three kept the instrument "going" about eight hours each day. Mr. Ater has held the offices of school director and road commissioner.

MR. JOHN S. ATER, farmer, Cerro Gordo, is a native of Ohio. His father was born in Ohio and his mother in Virginia. His father was one of the first settlers of Willow Branch, and John thinks he gave the name to the township. Mr. John Ater was married in March, 1867, to Mary A. Towl. He went to the army in Co. K of the 107th Ill. reg., and was in the following battles: those of the Atlanta campaign, Resaca, Buzzard Roost, Nashville and Franklin. He was never wounded or taken prisoner. Mr. Ater has held some township offices. He was assessor in 1870, and collector in 1871. He belongs to the Masonic order, the blue lodge at Cerro Gordo, and the chapter at Bement, and has been a church trustee of the Sangamon church for nine or ten years.

MR. THOMAS J. ATER, farmer, Cisco, is a native of Piatt county. His father, Willis Ater, came to the county about 1837 or 1838, and took Miss Nancy Fisher for his first wife, by whom he had two children, Thomas Jef. and John. His second wife was Eliza Williams, now Mrs. Ezra Cline. He died in 1851. Thomas J. Ater owns 313 acres of land in Willow Branch township, and has held his share of township offices. He was school director six or eight years, clerk for five or six years, has been collector, and in 1881 was assessor.

MR. NELSON ATER, farmer, Cisco, is a native of Ohio. His parents were from Ohio. Nelson came to Piatt county and settled on Camp Creek. After living there two years he moved to Willow Branch township, and has lived there ever since. He was married to Elizabeth Ward, who died, leaving one daughter, Sarah, who is still living at home. Mr. Ater is a member of the Odd-Fellows lodge. When we asked for some hunting or fishing stories, he let us know that he had enjoyed many a deer and wolf hunt. He told a fish story which must not be omitted. He, with four or five others, went seining to Henderson Ford. With but three draws of the seine they got a spring-wagon bed of fish. The result of the excursion was that some were made sick and Dr. Hull was sent for.

MR. HENRY ADAMS, farmer, Monticello, was born in Piatt county in 1846. He was married in 1871, to Mrs. Resstler née Christina West, whose first husband died, leaving three sons, Marion F., Wm. A. and George M., all of whom are at home. Mr. Adams has had four children, three of whom, Chas. L., L. V. Madison and Jesse, are living. He owns 200 acres of land in Willow Branch township, upon which he has made many improvements. He erected a neat seven-room frame house in 1864, and has planted some trees. He owns a tile kiln, which he has worked two years. He has made on an average 8,000 tile a year, and can burn and dispose of twelve kilns a season. After Mrs. Adams' first marriage she lived in Monticello a time, and finally moved to the place heired from her father's estate, and has improved it a good deal.

MR. JAMES ARMSWORTH, farmer and tile-maker, Cisco, is a native of this county. His father's and mother's wedding was one of the first in Willow Branch township. James married Emily E. Gulliford, has four children, Wm. E., Samuel, Celia and Bertha, and lives in Willow Branch township. He and George Still are running a tile yard near his house. They have been working it about two years and burn about twelve kilns a season. James owns 335 acres of land, 160 of which was his father's, Samuel Armsworth, old farm, and he lives in the house his father built. This farm was one of the first improved in the township.

MR. MADISON ADAMS, farmer, Cerro Gordo, married Mary Zellars, and has three children, Eli Otto, Calvin Wesley and Olive E. He held the office of pathmaster for two years. He went into the army from Piatt county, in Co. E, 72d Ill. The principal battles in which he participated were those of Vicksburg, Champion Hill, Franklin, Mobile and Nashville. He kept a diary throughout his entire three years of service. His father, Jacob Adams, settled in Macon county in 1846, but lived temporarily in Piatt county for several years. Six of his children are living, five of whom are in Piatt county: Hamilton was in the late war, and for the last ten years has been in Kansas; he came back to Piatt county in 1881, and has six children, Wm. R., Frank, Otto C., Alpha, Madison and Flora; Eli C. Adams has three boys, Madison, Frank and an infant, and lives south of Milmine. Henry lives in Willow Branch township, and Sarah J., the wife of Daniel Butler, has three children, Mary, Josie and Katie, and lives in Cerro Gordo township.

MR. JOHN ALSBURY, farmer, Cerro Gordo, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Sangamon county, Illinois, in 1830. He moved to Piatt county in 1865, and settled on the land he now lives on. He bought 240 acres, but has disposed of some of it. He was married in 1850, to Sarah A. West, who died September 23, 1866. Three of their six children are living, John W. and Sarah M. are at home; Morrison M. is making quite a musician of himself; he first studied at Jacksonville and then went to Boston, where he has been under the personal instruction of Prof. Julius Eichberg. He has been giving lessons and entertainments in central Illinois for about two years. The violin he uses is of European make and was imported by Prof. Eichberg.

MR. WILLIAM BAKER, farmer, Milmine, was born in 1830, in Pickaway county, Ohio, and in 1858 moved direct from that state to Piatt county. However, in 1851-2, he had spent almost a year in this county. He remarks that in 1851 people had not "fairly given up that they could live away out here in the prairie." He moved into his present residence, which had been built by Mr. Warner, in 1866, but had lived on the farm some seven years previous. When he first moved on his farm there were no improvements in a direct line south for ten or fifteen miles, and wolves used to howl around the door-yard quite frequently. He owns 180 acres of land, upon which he has made most of the improvements. The place is well hedged, has some five or six hundred rods of tile-ditching and is all under cultivation. He was married in 1853, to Ann Jane Grove, who was born in 1834, in Ohio, and came to Illinois in 1858. Their four children are all living. Thomas, a former student of the State Normal, and who has taught four terms of school, owns 100 acres of land in Willow Branch township, upon which he has put some of the improvements. His wife, née Emma Tallman, a former student of the Wesleyan University, owns 180 acres of land from her father's estate, which is partially improved. A frame house of four rooms has lately been built on the place. F. Marion Baker, who has taught school two years, is living at home. Mary H. and Florence M. are also at home. Mr. William Baker has been school director for he "don't know how many years," assessor, town clerk and supervisor. He belongs to the Masonic lodge of Cerro Gordo.

MR. S. M. BAKER, farmer, Milmine, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved west in 1843, passing through Piatt county. In 1856 he moved into Piatt county and settled on the farm he now lives on. He was married in Ohio in 1856, to Catharine J. Brown. They have had six children, three of whom, Oscar, Laura and Charles, are living. Mrs. Baker's parents located in Piatt county soon after Mr. Baker came. Several of her brothers died in the army. Mr. Baker belongs to the Masonic lodge at Cerro Gordo.

MR. ROBERT C. BLOOD, farmer, Cerro Gordo, is a native of New York, from which state he moved to Missouri in 1871, and in 1873 settled in Piatt county, on the farm where he now lives. He had been in the county, however, thirty years ago. For eight years he traveled to and from it while in the stock business. He has been working with stock ever since he was a child. When but twelve years old his father put him on the road in charge of 244 head of cattle, and, with five men under him, for a trip of 500 miles. He was somewhat overwhelmed for a time with the responsibility, but he got through all right, got the money for the cattle and paid off the men. Mr. Blood was one of the first men who ever took cattle from this state by the northern route, that is, via La Porte, Toledo and Buffalo to New York. He has herded cattle many times on the ground where Champaign is located. He now owns 640 acres of land, which he has partially improved. He has put up some fences, made some ditches, and has planted at least 250 trees. His present residence stands in a grove of forest trees. He has as fine a location for a country seat as any one in the county. Mr. Blood has succeeded well in farming. Some of his hay and corn crops have been especially good. In 1874 near 400 acres of corn averaged seventy bushels to the acre. He was married in 1853, to Sylvina L. Fitch, a native of New York. Two of their three children are living: Robert is at home; Ida married Mr. Wesley Humphrey, of Mexico, Missouri, but died in a year after marriage, leaving one son, Robert W.; Luther has attended school at the Wesleyan University at Bloomington and Ladoga, Indiana, and has the reputation of being a good scholar.

MR. PETER CRONINGER, farmer, Cerro Gordo, was born in Pickaway county, in 1818. He is of German descent and his parents were from Pennsylvania. In 1840 Mr. Croninger moved direct to Piatt county, where he had acquaintances, but no relatives. He bought land where he now lives in Willow Branch township, and now owns about 1,400 acres of land. He hauled the lumber for the first frame house he built after coming to the county from Indiana. The trips were made with four-horse teams and were the hardest drives he ever made. The wolves annoyed them and the flies were so persistent that the horses often seemed covered with blood. Mr. Croninger's present residence is of brick, contains seven rooms and was built in 1867. He was quite a hunter at an early day in the county. Once when hunting wild turkeys he killed what proved to be a pea-fowl. He often, by hunting nights and mornings of a month's time, would kill deer sufficient to fill a hog'shead with the hams. He still continues to have a reputation as a rail-maker. He has made rails each season since he was a boy, and used to make as many as 200 rails a day. Mr. Croninger has been an extensive stock dealer. Several years ago he paid out $64,000 in one year for hogs alone. He found that hogs were more paying than any other stock he has handled. He has long been regarded as one of the most influential men of the township and has held the office of supervisor. He was married in 1840, to Cynthia A. Madden, who was born in 1817, and who came to the county in 1839. They have had but one child, Malon L., who married Anna V. Rinehart, has four children, Earnest L., Charles L., Nellie Grace and Pearl Franklin, and makes his home with his father.

MR. HANSON S. COONROD, farmer, Cisco, was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, June 25, 1815. He moved from his native state to Piatt county about 1857. He was one of the early settlers in his part of the township. For awhile after coming here he lived on the Johns place, which now belongs to Mr. Allerton. He was married in Ohio to Charlotte Martin, who died in 1875. They had nine children, five of whom are living: John H. married Melissa Watson, has one child and lives near Nevada, Missouri; Sophrona E. married Jacob Andrews, has two children living, William and Charles Chester, and lives in Willow Branch township; Lavina married Jasper Chandler, has two children and lives in Macon county; Frankie is the wife of Joshua Hamilton, a dealer in farming implements at Cisco; they have two children, twins, Bertha and Bertie; Jeremy B. married Ella Woolington, has one child, Ethyl, and lives on the old home place. Mr. Hanson Coonrod was supervisor of Willow Branch township for several terms.

MR. AMOS CONAWAY, merchant, Cisco, is a native of Bourbon county, Kentucky, from where he moved to Vermilion county in 1829, and in 1830 he reached McLean county, but it was not until 1852 that he came to Monticello, Piatt county. He married Elizabeth Boyd, of Champaign county. They have had nine children, all of whom are at home.

Jane C., a successful teacher of the county, is now teaching in Monticello. Byron is with his father at Cisco. The names of the other members of the family are Hortense, Amos C., Lizzie, Naney, James E., Mary E. and Allen R. Mrs. Conaway's father, Stephen Boyd, was an early settler in Big Grove, Champaign county. He was there the night Nathan Henline was married, and has told how frightened Squire Byers was at the "falling of the stars." (See Mr. Henline's sketch.) Mr. Conaway began keeping store in Monticello in 1864, and, with the exception of about two years, continued in the dry-goods business there until about 1879, when he went to Cisco and has done business there ever since, though he has resided most of the time in Monticello. Mr. Conaway gave us some incidents relating to the "big snow" and "sudden freeze." When his folks moved to this part of the state they camped near Mahomet, on the snow, rather than go to a house where the whooping-cough was. The snow was so deep that when his mother was on a horse her feet would touch the snow. During the sudden change his brother rode a mile and a half, during which ride his clothes froze so stiff that the folks had to break them before he could get off his horse. Mr. Conaway was once telling of the sudden freeze when a man who used to live in Monticello spoke up and said that at that time he was driving a stage-coach and saw a deer struck so severely by that freezing blast that it froze stiff in its track. The man's age was reckoned on and it was found that he was three years old when he drove that stage-coach. Mr. Conaway was boarding at his brother-in-law's, R. M. Guy, in 1856, when Lincoln came to Monticello to speak. This is known as the first republican rally in this county. When Lincoln started to the court-house he invited Mr. Conaway to go along, but the latter remarked that he "would not be caught in such a crowd." This only illustrates the sentiment of the vast number of people of the county at that date.

WILLIAM B. CALDWELL, M.D., Cisco, is a native of Missouri, to which state his parents moved from Illinois. During the year 1859-60 he studied medicine at Cincinnati, and in 1860-1 at Keokuk, Iowa. He graduated in 1874 at the Rush Medical College in Chicago. He moved to Piatt county in 1874, and is living in Cisco. Previous to locating in the county, however, he taught three years at the Prospect school-house. He married Miss Mary Spencer, a native of Missouri, in 1864, and has had two children, Frank W. and Charles Burr. Since locating in Cisco he has built up quite an extensive practice, not only in Cisco, but throughout an area of country the radius of which is seven or eight miles. When asked to designate some of the most severe cases he had had, he spoke of the accident which occurred to James Armsworth's little girl. She was accidentally shot by her brother, who was looking at a pistol. The ball passed to the right of the breast-bone, between the third and fourth ribs, broke the seventh rib near the spine and lodged just behind the rib. Dr. Caldwell was sent for, and the ball was extracted while the child was under the influence of chloroform. The little girl was sick for sixteen months, but now seems perfectly well. If a person would like a glimpse in one of the happy homes in the county, we would advise him to spend a few hours in that of Dr. Caldwell.

MR. MICHAEL DILLOW (deceased) came to Piatt county in 1834, and was one of the first settlers in the Willow Branch township. He married Mrs. Shuman née Rachel Cawbel, and had five children. Leah married A. W. Lingle, and lives in southern Illinois. Charles was killed during the Mexican war, when on his way to Mexico. His company was camped on the Rio Grande for the purpose of burying a comrade, when an Irish company came up and was fighting among themselves. Charles' company was ordered to quell the disturbance and he was killed. Nancy married Isaac Collins and lives in Kansas. Catharine Lavina married Edward Woolington; she died of small-pox. He next married Miss Albert, and afterward took Miss Coon as his third wife, and now lives in Cisco. Michael married Matilda Thorpe in 1851, and in 1854 moved on to the place of 160 acres, where he now lives. Seven of their eight children are now living: Amos is living in Kansas; Monroe married Mary Redenbaugh, and is a mechanic and farmer; Alice, now teaching in the county, attended school at Lincoln University, Logan county; Samuel Burney, Mary and Sophrona are at home, while Lucinda, the next to the youngest, is in Lincoln. Mr. Dillow has held the offices of school director and township assessor. He is a Presbyterian minister. When speaking of this he made a remark which we will venture to mention. When being examined he was advised "never to tell he was a minister, for the sake of saving a bill." He says he tried to follow the advice. He has had charge of several congregations, but most of his work has been on Friends Creek.

MR. ADAM DORR, farmer, Cisco, is a native of Germany, from which country he emigrated in 1836. He lived about two years in New York city, seven years in Pennsylvania, and about 1844 he moved to Illinois. In 1862 he settled where he now lives, on Stringtown

Lane. At that time he bought eighty acres of land at $8 an acre. He had contracted for 160 acres, but as it was a wet year he persuaded the railway company to take back half of the land. He now says he would give at least $30 an acre if he had the rest. In speaking of improvements which have been made of late, Mr. Dorr remarked: "In the last twenty years Piatt county has improved more than any county I know of." He was married in 1845, to Mary Evans, a native of Kentucky, and has had six children, five of whom are living: Henry married Corry Bowzer and lived in Willow Branch township at the time of his death in 1876. Mabary owns eighty acres of land in the township; Annie married Irving Hinson, a farmer of the township, and has one daughter, Estella; William married Hattie Hinson, and has one son, Henry B.; Olive and Oscar are both at home. Mr. Dorr has been school trustee nearly ever since coming to the county.

MR. BENJAMIN F. DOOLEY, farmer, Cisco, was born in Kentucky, in 1818, and is of German and English descent. He moved to his present home in Piatt county November 2, 1860. The house was built and the place was partially improved by Mr. Sam'l E. Clay; Mr. Dooley, however, has added many improvements, including the planting of 730 trees, 207 of which are fruit trees and the remaining forest trees. He now owns eighty acres of land. When he first settled in the township there were but one or two houses between his place and Friends Creek. One house where Cisco now is, and Mr. Spencer's and Mr. Weddle's houses, were about the only houses in sight. The northwestern part of the township was covered with ponds and swamps. All this is changed now, and wheat and rye wave to the breeze where the swamp grass once held full sway. The settlers used sometimes to get lost in going to or from Monticello. Mr. Dooley was married June 7, 1843, to Sarah M. Jameson, a native of Kentucky, and who died January 10, 1880. Five of their nine children are still living: Wm. O. married Sarah E. Chase; Elizabeth Ann became the wife of George Hummel, of Cisco; Albert W. died when twenty-three years and Abel J. when seventeen years old; Mary E. married Daniel C. Miles. Thomas P. and Emma are still at home. Mr. Dooley has done his duty as school director and road overseer, and was justice of the peace for four years.

MR. GEORGE DILSAVER, farmer, Monticello, is of German descent and was born in 1815, in Fairfield county, Ohio. He moved from Ohio to Indiana, where he lived three and one-half years, and then in 1846 came to Piatt county. In 1848 he bought his present homestead.

Upon settling in his little log cabin he underwent the usual trials of new settlers. Deer, wolves and prairie chickens were quite plenty. Prairie fires were constant annoyances and did the usual amount of damage to this new settlement. He was married in Ohio in 1837, to Mary Winstead, who was born in 1815. They had five children, two of whom are living: Martha Ann married Wm. Dresback in 1860; he died in the army in 1863; she died in 1876, leaving two children: Marietta, who in 1879 married Wm. Duvall, has one child, Ford, and lives in Goose Creek township, and Elma, who in 1880 married Joseph H. Keller. Evaline Dilsaver is living at home with her parents; Manton married C. Jane Prouse, has five children, Mary E., George P., Olive, Frederick M. and Roscoe, and lives in Willow Branch township.

MR. SAM'L D. HAVELY, farmer, Cerro Gordo, was born in Pennsylvania in 1800, and was reared in Ohio. He came to Piatt county in 1837, and in 1838 moved into Willow Branch township. He made rails and fenced a half-section of land almost by himself. He was industrious, and, according to the report of a neighbor, would often work all day and not stop for dinner. He finally lost this farm to pay security debts, but now owns a half-section of land in another part of the township and is out of debt. He was married in 1826 to Elizabeth Wiley, who died in 1850, leaving four children: William is married and lives in Kansas; Margaret married Washington Allsup, has four children and lives in Maroa; her husband was quite wealthy, and the day he died he bought her a homestead of sixty acres joining Maroa; Mary became the wife of Isaac Reed, who died in less than two years, leaving one child; his widow married B. Frank Widick, but died, leaving one child. Mr. Widick married again just twenty-two years after his first marriage, and in the same house. Minor Havelly took Ellen Churchill as his first wife. Elizabeth Sherman, a relative of Roger Sherman of revolutionary renown, became his second wife; they have one son, Samuel, and live in Willow Branch township. In 1852 Mr. Sam'l Havelly married Mrs. Samuel Reason, née Rachel Fout. Mr. and Mrs. Reason married in Ohio, from which state they came to Piatt county and lived near Monticello. Mr. Reason died of measles, near Monterey, during the Mexican war. He left three children, two of whom died of measles the same week, and the other, William, is still living, and has been married twice, the first time to Kate Conrow, and the last time to Anna Camden. Each wife had three children; their names are Ella F., Josephine, Anna May, Laura B., Samuel and Pearl O. We suppose that Mr. Sam'l Havelly got his sobriquet of "Captain" from the fact that he was once captain of a boat, and at an early day was captain of a light horse company in Ohio. He avers that he cut down the first tree that was ever felled on the site of the present city of Columbus. He cut a coon tree there in 1813, and in the same year the sale of lots for that city was cried out from the stump of the tree. Twelve years ago the captain made a visit to Columbus, and while there pointed out the site of the old coon tree stump. He says a "whole troupe of gold-spectacled people were present," and the hospitality of the city was given him. Mr. Havelly illustrated to us in quite a vigorous manner the hardships which many of the pioneer settlers had to undergo. When they first came to the county they had to get their provisions at Springfield, Peoria, Chicago, and in Indiana. He tells of going to Chicago with six yoke of oxen and carrying about 100 bushels of wheat at a load. Once when on the road to that city, and when about seventeen or eighteen miles from home, the sole of one shoe came off. Soon the other gave out, and he went the rest of the way to and from Chicago barefooted. About 1838 he went to Decatur for salt, and upon finding that salt at that place was $16.60 a barrel, he immediately planned a trip to the Wabash for the article. He had quite an adventurous time on the way back with his salt, came near sinking the ferry-boat, but finally reached home and sold the salt at the rate of $12 a barrel, and that seemed cheap. Captain referred to quite an exciting wolf hunt that occurred in this county. People congregated from the neighboring counties of Macon and De Witt, and had some rare sport. Captain Havelly and Wm. Barnes finally got track of a wolf, which ran toward Monticello. It was overtaken by the dogs and men right on the spot where the courthouse stands. After deliberating over the best way to dispatch the animal, Mr. Havelly killed it with his stirrup. In those times it was quite common for people to have bloodhounds. Captain Havelly once had twenty-two of the old Virginia stock of hounds. Captain Havelly seems quite hale and hearty for a person of his age. During the summer of 1881 he went into the field and ploughed and harrowed three days.

MR. JOHN HEATH, farmer, Cerro Gordo, was born in New York in 1820, and is of English and Scotch lineage. He moved from New York to Ohio, from there to Macon county, Illinois, in 1852, and in 1853 settled on his present home-place, which was then raw prairie. At this time Mr. Austin Warner settled on part of what is now Mr.

Wm. Baker's place. He now lives in Nebraska. Mr. Heath has improved all of the 150 acres of land which he now owns. By the use of some ten or twelve thousand tiles he has succeeded in putting nearly every foot of the land under cultivation. The place is well hedged, and six hundred fruit trees and about seven or eight thousand forest trees have been planted. In 1854 Mr. Heath had forty acres in wheat, which yielded thirty bushels to the acre. He used the McCormick reaper for cutting it, and probably this was the first reaper used in the county. Part of the present residence was put up in 1854 and part in 1872. When they first settled on the place a shed answered for a dwelling-place for the family until spring. In 1842 Charity B. Warner and Mr. Heath were united in marriage. They have had eight children, seven of whom are now living: Frances A. married Geo. Robertson, and has four children, Elona, Bertie, Grace and Josephine; Harvey E. married Etta Snyder, and with two children lives in Nebraska; Alfred B. is farming at home; Ellen H. married Mr. Jas. Robertson, has four children, and lives in Nebraska; Hubert A., a former student of the Wesleyan University, and a teacher of this county, is now located in Topeka, Kansas; Eva G. is the wife of Edward Moyer; Ora E. married Owen Hitch, and is living at home. It is fenced with hedges into forty and eighty acre fields, and Mr. Kuns has planted on it at least 400 fruit trees, a three-acre grove of evergreens and a five-acre grove (planted in 1874) of ash, walnut, and other trees. He has succeeded

In 1867 or 1868 he erected one of the best and largest (containing eighteen rooms with cellar) brick houses in the county. Mr. Kuns was married in 1845, to Margaret Lamb, a lady of English and Scotch descent. They have had one son, Henry L., who married Ella Pierce in 1870, has three children and is now living near Gilroy, Santa Clara county, California. He moved there in 1877, but still owns a farm in Piatt county. Mr. and Mrs. David Kuns are prominent members of the German Baptist church, which they joined after coming to this county. No one who meets them can keep from admiring their great depth of character. The winter of 1881-2 Mr. Kuns and wife spent in California with their son.

MR. HENRY KUNS, farmer, Milmine, was born in Ohio in 1823. He moved from his native state to Indiana "in the timber and among the Indians," but afterward, in 1864, moved to Piatt county and settled on the place which he bought of Mr. Stillman Barber. The present residence was on the place, the orchard was planted and some other improvements were made, but Mr. Kuns has built corn-cribs, cider and scale sheds, and a brick "cooking-house." He has also put out some hedge and 800 fruit trees and 2,000 forest trees, and has put in several hundred rod of tiling. There are some 327 acres in the home farm, upon which has been raised quite good crops. Mr. Kuns owns 160 acres in Willow Branch township, and two farms of 160 acres each in Cerro Gordo township. He has put all improvements on these places, including the planting of some 600 trees on each place. He has also planted 700 trees on a 160-acre farm of his in Sec. 20 of Cerro Gordo township. Two acres of this farm he donated for a school-house. He improved the N.E. $\frac{1}{4}$ of Sec. 20 in Cerro Gordo township, and gave it to his daughter. He built a large barn in 1875, and in 1877 a brick house containing seventeen rooms, with halls and cellars. It fronts the south, from which view it presents a fine appearance. He has planted on this place between two and three thousand forest trees and five hundred fruit trees. He has had excellent crops on this farm.

In 1875 he moved to a farm about two and one-half miles west of Bement. He owns a farm of 260 acres, part of which was improved when he took possession of it. The farm is ditched well with both open and tile ditches, and about three hundred and fifty trees have been planted on the place. Every yard of the farm is under cultivation. About fifteen years ago the place was sold at $10 an acre. In 1849 Mr. Turner and Hannah Rouse were united in marriage. They have had four children, three of whom are living. Wallace W. is at home. Carrie, who taught four years in Piatt county, is now the wife of Mr. S. N. Gallup, of Macedon, Wayne county, New York, and has one son, George N. Fannie is at home. Mr. Turner was a school director for three terms. He belongs to the Bement Masonic lodge No. 365, to the Bement chapter and the Beaumanoir commandery, K.T., of Decatur. He went to the late war in the 9th N. Y. Hy. Art. Cedar Creek was the principal battle he engaged in. He was wounded at this place and remained on the battle-field twenty-four hours, and while there the rebels dispossessed him of a portion of his clothing. He saved his life by bandaging the right limb, the main vein of which was severed, with bandages made by his wife before he left home. After being placed in the physician's care, each one who examined him from October till June remarked that a physician had surely found him very soon after he was wounded. But no, the thoughtful care of his wife and his readiness to apply a remedy were the only physician. His wife received five letters telling of his death, but at the same time received a few words from him. He receives a pension at the present time.

MR. WILLIAM H. TELFORD, merchant, Cisco, is a native of Marion county, Illinois. In 1868 he moved to Piatt and settled four miles north of Cisco. He moved to Cisco August 17, 1876 and opened a drugstore. He now has general merchandise, grain, coal, lumber, etc. At present he is building quite an extensive store building 24×124 feet, which will contain three rooms below and two halls on the second floor. He was married in 1870, to Martha Nelms, native of Missouri, and has had seven children, six of whom are living: Anna M., Charles, Clarence, Robert and an infant. Mr. Telford went to the army from Centralia in Co. E of the 70th Ill. reg. He was again in Co. H of the 6th Cav. for twenty-two months. The battles at Nashville and Tallahatchie were the principal ones in which he engaged.

MR. WILLIAM TALLMAN, farmer, Monticello, has attended school both at the Wesleyan University and the State Normal, and at present is living on his father's home farm. He has had charge of the place for several years, has a good grade of stock, and has the farm in good condition. His father, Douglas Tallman (now deceased) improved the place of 525 acres. Mr. Tallman and his wife (now Mrs. Dr. Farra, of Monticello), had four children, three of whom are living. Alice is the wife of Wilbur Stevenson. George died in California at the age of twenty-three. Emma is the wife of Mr. Baker, of Willow Branch township.

MR. JOHN WEST (deceased) was a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Ohio when a boy. He was married there and moved to Illinois about 1835, and settled just above the mouth of Willow Branch in Piatt county. They camped in wagons until the little log house was built, and then moved into it before the door was entirely cut out. By his first wife, née Eleanor Corder, who was born in 1818, and died in 1846, Mr. West had nine children, eight of whom reached the age of maturity. Elizabeth, who was the wife of Wm. Stewart, died in 1840. Eliza, was the wife of Mr. Geo. Wolf, who improved the farm where Mr. Jno. Moffett now lives. Both died, leaving no issue. Catharine, born in 1827, married Abraham Peck. Rhoda was never married. Mary married Moses Savage in 1853. He died in 1855, leaving one daughter, Nora Hiatt. Mrs. Savage next married Peter Ecord. Christina is the wife of Mr. Henry Adams. Mr. John West married Hannah Denton in 1847. She died in 1851, and he took for his third wife Hannah Baily. In 1854 Melinda Johnston became his fourth wife, and in 1862 he married Nancy Rogers. His last wife is still living in Virginia. Mr. West was quite an extensive land-owner. He entered about 600 acres of land, bought about as much more. In his will he gave 300 acres to each of his children, and 300 acres to his grandchildren. He was a zealous member of the Universalist church.

MR. CYRUS WIDICK, farmer, Monticello, is a native of Kentucky, who settled in Macon county in 1826, and in 1835 he came to Piatt county. His father, George Widiek, settled on the place Cyrus now lives on. He was one of the earliest settlers of the township, and during his lifetime owned 120 acres of land. He died in April, 1857, and his wife followed him in 1863. Both lie at the Sangamon cemetery. Only two of their children, Cyrus and Mrs. Isaac Howell, are now living in the county. Mr. George Widick burnt a brick kiln in 1846 on the site of the Fair Ground. He was probably the first brickmaker in the county. The subject of our sketch owns 205 acres of land, upon which he has put most of the improvements. At least fifty trees have been planted and some tiling has been done. He has built a six-room frame house almost in the door-yard of the house his father lived in. He was married in 1851, to Mary E. Peck, and has had six children, four of whom are living. Ira D. married Kate Rhinehart, and at present is living at his father's. Jennie, the wife of Tho. A. Ayers, has one child and lives in Macon county. Ella and George are both at home.

MR. HENRY WATROUS, merchant, Cisco, was born in Ohio in 1820. He moved from this state to Piatt county, Illinois, in 1856, and settled at the entrance of what is known as Stringtown Lane. From there he moved to Friends Creek and about six years ago he settled in Cisco.

He was married in Ohio to Sarah Robinson. They had ten children, nine of whom lived to be grown. Mary J. married Jonas B. Garver. Frank married Clara Keller, has one child, and is a grocer of Cisco. R. Ann married Henry Combs, but died leaving two children, one of whom is now living. Evaline, the wife Bartley Parker, a farmer in Missouri, has two children. Rachel is the wife of John Banford, a grocer of Newburg, Macon county, and has three children. Amanda married Harvey Robins, has two children and lives in Macon county. Emma, the wife of James Bowers, has one child. Lucinda married Samuel Ransomer, and lives in Ohio. Thomas is not married. Mr. Henry Watrous took Mrs. Editha Smith, née Longnecker, for his second wife. Her first husband came to his death several years ago in a very tragic manner. We are indebted to Mr. Watrous for the following account. Mr. Smith and wife came home one evening after gathering blackberries. She went into the house, while he went to water his mule. He stayed so long that she sent the children for him. The family searched to no avail, and then the neighbors searched the woods and at about daylight the mule was found with Mr. Smith's lifeless body tied—with a rope that crossed around the neck and was knotted at the back—to it. The coroners reported that he came to his death by accident, but it looked to many very much as if he had been foully dealt with. Frank Watrous enlisted in the late war, but took sick before leaving Camp Butler, and his father went and took his place. He was out nine months in Co. D of the 73d Ill. reg. He was discharged because of a wound and now receives a pension.

Mr. JOHN W. WINN, farmer, Cisco, is a native of old Virginia. He moved from Harper's Ferry to Springfield, Illinois, in 1847, and in 1868 he moved from Sangamon county to Piatt county. He first settled in Goose Creek township, but in 1878 he moved to Willow Branch township. The next year after settling in the county there were as many as fourteen houses going up in the neighborhood, notwithstanding the fact that when he first went on the prairie he thought he was going almost to nowhere. At that time in his neighborhood "dogs were the only fences" the people had for their land. Mr. Winn is living on rented land now, but he owns four houses and fifteen lots in Monticello. He was married in 1842, to Mary A. Derry, a native of old Virginia. Four of their nine children are living. Ann Matilda was the wife of John Haney, of Sangamon county, but she died, leaving one child. Lydia Ann is at home. William Leslie married Matilda Crow, has three children and lives in Champaign county. Emily Virginia, the wife of Robert Simpson, of Foosland, has one child. Martha Jane is at home. Mr. Winn has not escaped serving in some of the smaller offices of the township.

MR. ANDREW J. WILLIAMS, farmer, Cisco, is a native of Pickaway county, Ohio. His father was a native of Maryland and his mother of Ohio; both are dead. The subject of our sketch came to Champaign county in 1859, and in 1861 settled in Piatt county. He was married in 1865, to Violet E. Hurst, a native of Sangamon county. The names of their children are Frank, Loton, Viola, Rosa, Maggie, Seymour, Scott and Chester. Mr. Williams owns a good-sized farm, which he has improved a good deal, and he is recognized as a successful and enterprising farmer. He belongs to the Odd-Fellows lodge. In 1862 he went in Co. H of the 107th Ill. reg. to the late war. He enlisted as a private, was promoted to 2d lieutenant and then to 1st lieutenant. The principal engagements in which he participated were those of Franklin, Nashville, Knoxville, Decatur, Resaca and Kenesaw Mt. He never missed a skirmish, a detail or battle of his regiment, was sick but seven days, and was discharged in July, 1865. When asked if he was ever wounded, he said "no," then smilingly added, "the only place I ever was hit was on the sword handle."

MR. CLARKSON C. WILLIAMS (deceased), a blacksmith and farmer, moved to this county in 1849 and lived here until his death, in 1852. He bought land of Mr. William LeForge, and his widow, with one son, Clark, are still living on the place. Three of his sons and two daughters are still living in the county. Joseph William, a soldier of the late war, married Mary Williams, lives in Willow Branch township and has five children, Eva, Mima, Joseph, Rufus and Sylvia. Ralston Williams first married Harriet Hott, who died, leaving one child, Perry. He next married a daughter of Mr. Bartley. Margaret married Monroe Peck, lives in Willow Branch township and has three children, Irvin, Orin and Everett. Clark, the eldest son, and a soldier of the late war, married Sarah F. Mc——, of Adams county, and has three children living, Janie, Eliza and Edward. Eliza married Mr. Ezra Cline.

MR. THOMAS B. WILLIAMS, farmer, Cisco, is a native of Pickaway county, Ohio. In 1866 he moved to Illinois, to Piatt county, and about fourteen years ago settled on the place he now lives. He owned and improved a farm of about ninety acres. He was married in 1866, to Sarah E. Dallas, and has had five children, Clairet R., Marion F., Anna Grace, Charles B. and Maurice. He went to the army in 1862, in Co. A of the 40th O. V. I., and in 1862 marched through Kentucky. He went to Nashville and was at the battle of Franklin, Mission Ridge and Lookout Mountain. He remembers one interesting foraging expedition, which lasted five days, in one of the richest and most beautiful valleys in the South. He took part in the battles of Lookout Mountain, Chickamauga, Kenesaw Mt., and was in a bayonet charge across a big cotton field owned by a rebel general.

MR. JOHN W. WOOD, farmer, Cerro Gordo, was born in Virginia, in 1827. He moved from that state to Ohio, and in 1848 came to Vermilion county. He came to Piatt county in 1849, and lived for a time three and a half miles northeast of Monticello, after which he moved to his present home in Willow Branch township. He was married in 1856, to Amanda Peek, a native of Ohio. Seven of their eight children are living, Robert E., Jennie May, George L., Frank C., Benjamin N., Harry B. and Dick Milton. Mr. Wood has been school director and supervisor. He went to the army in July, 1862, as first lieutenant of Co. E, of the 107th Ill., and was promoted first to captain and then to major. He took part in the following engagements: Buzzard Roost, Atlanta, Franklin, Nashville, and several skirmishes. He was also in the fourteen days' siege of Knoxville and reports life during that time as being very hard. They ate parched corn and bran bread. When the oxen got so poor they could not travel they were killed for meat, and several hogs that could not give the countersign were killed.

MR. JESSE YOAKUM, farmer, Monticello, is a native of Ross county, Ohio, from which state he moved to Piatt county, Illinois, in 1858. He had been to the county several times previously, however. He first settled in Willow Branch township, on land now owned by Mr. S. W. Allerton. At that time he owned land in Macon county, but disposed of it, and got possession of the place he now lives on. He now owns 700 acres, upon which he has made most of the improvements. The place is drained by three and a half miles of open ditch, and it has averaged good crops each year. About six years ago eighty acres of corn averaged eighty bushels to the acre, and the crop of 1881 averaged sixty-five bushels. There are two good bearing orchards, besides other fruit trees, on the farm. Mr. Yoakum has some of the finest stock which has ever been in Willow Branch township. The cattle are Short-horns, and the horses Clydesdale (Clydell), Norman and Persian. He erected his eight-room frame residence in 1879. It presents a very pleasant appearance from without, and one has only to glance within to discover that not only a housekeeper, but a homekeeper, dwells therein. Mr. Yoakum was married in 1861, to Alice McCoy, who died ten years later, leaving one daughter, Fannie, who died at the age of fifteen. He took for his second wife Miss Emma Blaine, a native of Indiana. One son, Wm. Allerton, was born July 21, 1881. Mr. Yoakum has not escaped all the offices in the township. He has been road-master for one year, and school director eight or nine years.

MR. SEYMOUR YOAKUM, farmer, Bement, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Indiana, and from there to Piatt county in 1862. He first settled on Dr. John's farm. He now owns 120 acres of land in Willow Branch township, has fenced it, ditched it to the extent of a mile or more of tiling, and has planted at least 100 trees on it. He was first married to Betty Arrowsmith, a native of Ohio, who died leaving one child, Theo. L. He next married Medora Waughop.

MR. JAMES T. VENT, farmer, Monticello, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved in 1858 to Marion county, Illinois, and in 1859 he settled in Piatt county on the farm where he now lives, but it was then owned by Mr. James Ater. He owns 228 acres of land, twenty-eight acres of which are timber land, and has improved the place a good deal in the way of ditching, fencing, and the planting of about 200 fruit trees. In 1872 he built a neat frame residence. Mr. Vent has succeeded well, both in the raising of grain and in stock raising. In 1872 over fifty acres of corn averaged seventy-five bushels to the acre. The next year the average was sixty-five bushels to the acre. He thinks he once sold to Piatt & Kirby the heaviest car-load of hogs that ever went out of the township, or out of the county. The sixty-four hogs averaged three hundred and sixty-eight pounds apiece. He also sold to A. M. Piatt, in 1875, seventy-five head of hogs, which averaged three hundred and fifty pounds. Mr. Vent was married in 1865, to Elizabeth Ater, and has had six children, John W., Viola, Charity, James A., Lizzie and Sabina J. Mr. Vent has been commissioner of highways for three years, and school director for eight or nine years.

CHAPTER XXI.

GOOSE CREEK TOWNSHIP.

GOOSE Creek township lies northwest of Monticello township, and is bounded on the north by Blue Ridge township, on the east by Sangamon, on the south by Monticello and Willow Branch, and on the west by De Witt county. The western boundary line is quite uneven, so that De Witt county bounds a small portion of the township on the north. The township contains about fifty-six sections of land, finely located for farming. It has, in addition to a large amount of tillable land, a good deal of timbered ground.

It is well drained by both Goose creek and Friends creek. The main course of the former-named stream is from the northwest to the southeast, and it empties into the Sangamon river at almost exactly the southeastern corner of the township. This creek derived its name from the fact that two wild geese had their nests in the tops of trees which were on the banks of the stream. These geese had their nests here for a number of successive seasons. The western part of the township is drained by Friends creek, another branch of the Sangamon. The land along these streams is slightly rolling, while, as it recedes from them it is comparatively flat. There is but a very small portion of the township now that is untillable.

There is but one railroad in this township. The Havana branch of the Chicago division of the Wabash railway enters the township at almost exactly the middle point of the eastern boundary line, angles northwest for about one mile, and then extends almost due west, entering De Witt county about five miles north of the southern boundary line of Goose Creek township.

The first settlements of this township have already been referred to. The first cabin on Goose creek was built near the present residence of George Varner. The Olneys were early settlers, and we think that Mr. and Mrs. Olney, who were buried just north of where Mrs. M. J. Marquiss lives, were the first who died in the township. Mr. Abraham Marquiss and sons followed the Olneys in making settlement. Ezra Marquiss, Sr., has lived longer in Goose Creek township than any other person. 'Tis going on fifty years since he first set foot on Goose creek soil. William Piatt and wife are the next oldest residents. The Welches were also early settlers, as was also Mr. Richard Hubbard. We might mention other comparatively early settlers, but sketches of the most of them appear further on.

De Land.—This township has but one town, which is situated on the Havana Branch railroad, about four miles from the eastern boundary line of the township. This is an enterprising place of over 300 inhabitants. It has already made a rapid growth and bids fair to keep on growing. According to the surveyor's certificate, De Land was laid out for Thomas E. Bondurant on the 23d and 25th days of April, and the 20th and 21st days of May, 1873, and is situated on the N. W. $\frac{1}{4}$ Sec. 9, T. 19 N., R. 5 E. 3d P. M.

According to Thomas Bondurant, S. C. Langdon owned the first dwelling house in De Land. Mr. Langdon was the first station agent, and was the first postmaster, which position he still holds. Richard Tilson says he moved the first dwelling into De Land. In the fall of 1873 R. B. Moody and John Vail built a store where the latter had had the first store of the place. Dr. J. A. Davis was the first physician in the town, Dr. H. M. Harrison was next, and then Dr. Wood came. Dr. William T. Ward was the first neighborhood physician, but he never lived in the town. Dr. J. R. Gardiner was in the place for a short time.

De Land of to-day contains two churches, a school building, and about fifteen business firms. Quite a number of new residences have been erected the past year, and Moody & Rodman have recently put up an elevator having a capacity for 30,000 bushels of grain. T. E. Bondurant is erecting a commodious dwelling, which bids fair to be the finest residence of the place.

Goose Creek township has reason to be proud of its one town, which has sprung up so rapidly, and the citizens of the place are well-deserving of praise for their part in its growth.

Union Church.—The following items were obtained from Mr. Moody. The Christian and Protestant Methodists joined forces for the erection of a new church, and the meeting for the election of the trustees was held September 25, 1875. A. R. Borton was chairman, and J. P. VanVickle, secretary. The following were made trustees, the first three of whom were chosen on the building committee: A. R. Borton, T. E. Bondurant, R. B. Moody, Jacob Mansfield, N. B. Moberly, Robert Bryden and M. D. Marvel. The location for the church was chosen in block 2, lots 13 and 14, and the church building, which cost $2,700, was built by Meredith & Roberts, of Monticello, and was completed July 15, 1876. The church was dedicated July 23, 1877, and Elder Moppin, of the Christian church, and J. M. Mayall, president of the North Illinois conference of the P. M. church, were present. The following ministers of the P. M. church have preached in DeLand: Rev. D. Ackerman, Rev. J. W. Kidd, Rev. Chas. Slack, and Rev. L. S. Hitchins. The Christian ministers are Rev. Moppin, Rev. Samuel Lowe, Rev. Jas. Seaton and Elder Robinson.

Methodist Episcopal Church.—This organization was transferred from the Ashland school-house to DeLand about 1874, while Mr. Winterbottom was minister. On the 24th of March, 1879, a meeting was held to see about the building of the present church building. R. B. Moody, Salem Kesler, Joel H. Rhinehart, Jno. W. Cyphers, Jacob Stults (deceased), were appointed trustees. The building was erected under the management of a building committee, who employed workmen by the day. It cost $2,250, and was dedicated February 7, 1880, by Rev. Hiram Buck. J. D. Bodkin was the first minister in the new church, and H. C. Turner was the second. There has been a Sunday-school in connection with the church ever since the transfer to DeLand. At first it was a Union Sunday-school, which was held in a hall, and then in the Union church. Under the charge of Rev. Bodkin a Methodist Sunday-school was organized in the Methodist church.

Kentucky School-house.—The ground for the Kentucky school-house was donated by Rev. Johnson for both church and school purposes. At present three denominations hold services there: a congregation of Germans who are Baptists, the Mission Baptists, and a United Brethren minister preaches every two weeks. Sometimes there are three sermons and two Sunday schools on a Sunday. The German Baptists have a regular church organization, and I. C. Dösher is their present minister. They have bought some land for their minister, but at present rent a place for him. He has what he can make off the place and is paid some besides. This is a small congregation, but is certainly an enthusiastic one, or so much would not be done for their minister. There is talk of a church being built by donation.

CHAPTER XXII.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MR. JOHN ARNDT, farmer, Monticello, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Illinois in 1873, and in 1874 he came to Piatt county. He was in the government employ for eighteen months during the late war. He was married March 9, 1881, to May B. Marsh, has had one child, Ezra Noble, and lives in Goose Creek township.

MR. JOHN BAILEY was born in Ohio, from which state he moved to Piatt county, Illinois, about 1835 or 1836 and settled on the place Mr. John Bender is now living on. He lived on this place until he moved to Monticello for a year. After returning to the farm for a short time he went to Iowa in 1878 and bought town property. He was married in Ohio, to Mary Hubbard, and had thirteen children, twelve of whom are living. Elizabeth married John Funston, has a large family and lives in Champaign county. Jane married Allen Hubbard, has four children and lives in Iowa. David married Nancy J. Herron, has six children and is a carpenter in Mahomet. James married Catherine Perkins and is a farmer in Iowa. Martha is the wife of Benjamin Rhoades, sheriff of Marshalltown, Iowa, and has five children. Nancy is the wife of Robert Culp, of Plymouth county, Iowa, and is the mother of five children. William married Marion Burgess, has two children and is a grocer in Marshalltown, Iowa. Mary is the wife of Philip Lewis, has one child and lives in Sac City, Iowa. Richard married Matilda Burson, has two children and is a grocer in Atlanta, Iowa. Matilda is the wife of Henry Dewees, of Goose Creek township, and is the mother of six children, Carrie, Effie, Edgar and Edwin, twins, Ora and Lizzie. Lydia Bailey was married in 1873, to Mr. John Bender, and has two children, Arthur and Mabel. Clara Bailey is living at home in Marsalltown, Iowa.

MR. WILLIAM BAILEY came to the county about 1836 and settled on the farm upon which Mr. William Dewees lives. His eldest daughter, Margaret, married Mr. John Stansbury and lived in Cheney's Grove. She died leaving several children. Ellen married Tho. Stansbury, had two children and lived in Cheney's Grove. Edward died after he became of age. George is also dead. Rebecca was the wife of James Perkins, but both she and her husband are dead. Minnie married Mr. Jerry Rock, who died, leaving one daughter, Emma, who is now the wife of Luther Horr. Mrs. Rock next married Mr. Keller. Albert and James Bailey are both dead.

MRS. MARTHA BONDURANT in 1854 was living with her family in Sangamon county, Illinois, but afterward moved to Piatt county. Five of her children have lived in this county. Of these Thos. E. Bondurant is the eldest. He came to Piatt county in 1854 and secured 293 acres of land, where he now lives, paying fifty cents an acre for the same. When Mr. Bondurant came in 1856 to put out the orchard, he borrowed a pole and an ax of the nearest neighbor. With the ax he drove the pole into the ground, not far from where their present home is, hitched his horse to the pole and proceeded to select the place for an orchard. Mr. Bondurant's farm was for a number of years partially covered with water each year. At the present time, with the excellent system of drainage, which he is gradually perfecting, the farm is in good condition and ranks as one of the finest in the county. Mary Bondurant has been in the county for the last twenty years. She has taught school in various parts of the county during this time, is quite an active member of the Christian church, and has been superintendent of the Union Sunday-school of De Land. On the 1st of March, 1877, there occurred in this family what came near being a serious tragedy. The family quite frequently had bread and milk for supper. In the evening of the day mentioned Miss Mary brought in the milk for supper. Upon emptying the milk from the pan she discovered a white sediment in the bottom of the pan. She thought something had accidentally fallen into the pan and so went for more milk. Mr. Tho. Bondurant had gone to De Land, so that only Mrs. Bondurant, Mary and the hired man, Mr. Browley, were there for supper. Before Miss Mary was half through her supper she became deathly sick and went out on the porch. When she came back she found her mother looking for some cloves to relieve her of the sick feeling she experienced. Mary said, "Mother, I am very sick." Her mother answered, "so am I." Mr. Browley said, "I am sick, too." Upon hearing this Mary asserted they were all poisoned, and told the man to jump onto a horse and go to De Land for her brother and a physician. The man did not wait for a second telling, but started and ran the horse all the way to town. Upon reaching De Land he was very sick, but managed to let his errand be known. When the physician and Mr. Bondurant reached the house Miss Mary was on the floor unable to get up and was almost unconscious. Mrs. Bondurant had fainted once, and for a time they thought that she was dead. It was found to be a case of arsenic poisoning. How the arsenic got into the milk was never known. There was not the slightest cause for suspicioning any one whom they knew of attempting to poison the family. Fortunately no lives were lost. Mrs. Bondurant, however, has never ceased to feel the effects of the arsenic.

MR. NEWTON BONDURANT married Sarah Devore, of Piatt county, February 19, 1867. They have had three children, Willie, Frank and Earnest, two of whom are dead. Their home until quite lately was within two miles of Farmer City.

MR. SAMUEL BONDURANT came to Piatt county soon after his brother Thomas did. He married Miss Ellen Barnett, of Douglas county, and in 1862 moved to that county. Lucretia J. Bondurant married Mr. Joel Churchill.

MR. JAMES A. BROWN's parents were born in Albemarle county, Virginia. They had a family of eight children. Mr. Brown was married in 1844, to Miss Margaret A. Hull. In November, 1857, they moved to Piatt county, Illinois, and settled on a farm bought the previous year of Dr. P. K. Hull, a brother of Mrs. Brown. This farm continued to be the family homestead until the fall of 1880. It is now owned by Dr. Noecker, of Monticello. Mrs. Brown's parents were born in Virginia. Her father enlisted in the war of 1812, but peace was declared before he reached the scene of action. Mrs. Brown is a graduate of the Kalorama Seminary, in Stanton, Virginia. Upon her arrival in Illinois, Mrs. Brown thought the prairies, in spite of their summer beauty, a barren exchange for the forest-clad mountains of Virginia. But soon such feelings were dispersed, and now she says she much prefers a prairie to a timbered country. Mr. James Brown died October, 22, 1878, and left a family sadly bereft of a kind and loving husband and an affectionate father. Six of Mr. and Mrs. Brown's children were born in Virginia. Of these Belle, the eldest, was born in 1845, and was married September 1, 1869, to Mr. James A. Shepherd. Since 1877 their home has been in Iowa; they have one child. Bettie was born May 30, 1847, and was married July 3, 1873, to Mr. Joseph M. Woolington; three children bless their union. Emma was born July 29, 1849. On August 20, 1867, she married Mr. Joseph H. Rankin, and they, with their child, are still living in this county. Mollie was born June 6, 1880. While on a visit to her sister in Missouri, she met Mr. Robert Hays, whom she married November 30, 1880. J. Hull Brown, who was born August 15, 1855, was considered by all who knew him as a very promising young man. He attended school in Lebanon, Ohio, and afterward attended the law department of the Ann Arbor University. He was a successful school teacher for several years in this county. After but a short illness, he died January 21, 1879. Lucy was born March 18, 1857, and on February 8, 1876, married Mr. Rufus C. Gordon. They are the parents of three children, and at the present time are living in Missouri. Ada E. was born in Illinois April 8, 1860. In 1878, March 14, she married Mr. Ellis Reed, and has one child. The remaining children are living with their mother in Monticello: Floyd F. was born January 27, 1863; Clara M. was born May 22, 1865; and Olive F. was born December 23, 1867.

MR. WILLIAM E. BARNETT (deceased) was born in Dayton, Ohio, but his parents moved to Bourbon county, Kentucky, when he was but two years old. From there they moved to McLean county, from which place Mr. Barnett moved to Piatt county about 1850, and settled in Monticello, where he and his wife kept hotel for several years. His eldest son, Thomas E., was married in 1872, to Mrs. Michael Croninger née Susanna Robinson, and has three children: Charles C., Eddie E. and William W. Since his marriage he has lived on the farm he now lives on. Charlotte Welch married Peter Widdershein, has several children, and lives in Monticello; Hamlin B. married Rhoda Long, who died, leav-

Five of their six children are living. Sophia Jane became the wife of John Bradford, who died in the army, leaving five children. Of these, Sarah Ann married James Huffman, and lives in Colorado; Asenath is in Champaign county. Mrs. Bradford was next united in marriage to Jerry Davis. Dan'l Henry Welch married Lizzie Jacobs, has one child, and is a carpenter in Indiana; Hannah married Wm. MR. JESSE WARNER, farmer, Monticello, was born in Ross county, Ohio, December 16, 1830. He came on horseback from Pickaway county, Ohio, to Piatt county in 1852. Soon after coming here he began dealing in stock for other men, and made several trips to Missouri for the same. During his time he was in the employ of Wm. H. Piatt part of the time. In 1856 he went east with hogs for Mr. Piatt, and at Lockport, New York, a train ran into the stock train and injured Mr. Warner so that his right arm had to be amputated. He called Mr. Wm. Piatt's his home from 1853 until his marriage, in 1873, to Miss Kate Schultz, when he went on to his own farm. His wife died September 29, 1875, and Mr. Warner was married January 6, 1878, to Louisa Connor. He has two children, Ollie and an infant son, Eddie Connor. Mr. Warner's sister, Elizabeth Warner, has lived in Piatt county over twenty years, and with the exception of two years her home has been at Wm. H. Piatt's.

MR. JESSE B. WALKER (deceased) was born in Kentucky, in 1822. From there he moved to Indiana, and in 1855 moved to Illinois. In 1864 he settled on a farm of 240 acres in Goose Creek township. He put nearly all the improvements on the place, and died there, April 21, 1878. He was one of the early settlers in the vicinity of De Land. He was married December 22, 1841, to Rebecca Saturwhite, who died August 13, 1855. They had six children, four of whom are living: Elizabeth married J. W. Davis, but died leaving a child, which soon died; Daniel M. married Jane Davis, who died leaving five children; I. D. Walker attended the law school at Bloomington, was married recently, and is now practicing law at Decatur; Ann M. married David Camp, and had three children: Willie, Ada and Eddie; she is now the wife of Mr. Chas. Anderson, and lives on the old home-place which William and I. D. have control of; Wm. I. Walker attended school in Green Castle, Indiana, for about four years, and is now practicing law in Decatur, Illinois.

DR. JNO. H. WOOD, of De Land, is a native of Fulton county, Illinois. His father is a native of Pennsylvania, and his mother of Maryland. He was married in 1876, to Sarah Piersoll, a native of Fulton county. Mrs. Wood has been quite a successful school teacher, both at Ashland school and in De Land. Dr. Wood went to the army in the 6th Cav., and was in some of the principal battles in Virginia. He attended and graduated at the Allopathic Medical School, at Keokuk, Iowa. He came to Piatt county in December, 1875, and at present is the only physician located at De Land.

MR. HUGH WILSON, farmer, Cisco, was born in Harding county, Ohio, and was one of the first settlers of the neighborhood in which he lives. He owns a good-sized farm, which he has in a fine condition. He recently built a large barn and some cribs. Mr. Wilson was first married in Ohio, and had several children: John H., who married Sarah A. Passwaters, keeps hotel in Weldon, and has three children; William married Mattie Weddle, and lives in Missouri; Jane is the wife of William Glass, lives in Goose Creek township, and has no children; Cyrus and Charlie are at home. He was married about 1850, to Lucinda Hartsock, and has four children: Grisanna Belle married William Chopin, lives in Goose Creek township, and has two children, Clarence and Donna Lu; J. Calvin attended school at the Wesleyan University; George E. attended the State Normal; and Elwood N. is at home. Mr. Williamson keeps quite an apiary. He has about ninety stands of bees, and is prepared to furnish all necessary supplies belonging to apiculture, such as, queens, bee-hives, boxes, etc.

CHAPTER XXIII.

SANGAMON TOWNSHIP.

SANGAMON township lies north of Monticello township, and contains forty-eight sections of land. The land of this part of the county is well drained by the Sangamon river, which flows southwest across the township, and Camp creek and Madden's run, both tributaries of the Sangamon. In addition to a goodly portion of timber land, there is a generous amount of rich tillable land. Sangamon township has three railroads, more than any other township in the county. These are all in the possession of the Wabash Railway Company. The first one built, which until recently was known locally as the Campaign & Decatur road, strikes the township near the middle of the eastern boundary line, runs southwest, crossing the southern boundary line about a mile east of the extreme southwest corner of the township. The Havanna branch leaves the road just referred to at the station White Heath, runs northwest, leaving the township a little above the middle of its western boundary line. The Chicago division of the Wabash road enters the township almost exactly at its southwest corner, crosses the township angling a little to the east, and leaving it about two miles east of the northwest corner of the township. There are three stations on these roads, White Heath, Galesville and Lodge.

Early settlement.—Some of the first settlements in the county were made in this township. Mrs. Nancy Ingram still lives in the township, and Mr. and Mrs. Henline used to live here. The Wrights were early settlers, as were Mr. Souders, the Oulérys, Maddens, Mackeys, Coons, Argos and others. It was reported to us that a child of Mr. Andy Winters was the first birth in the township, and that Mrs. Sarah Wright, who was buried at the Cline and Ingram cemetery, was the first one who died in the township. For some reason it was exceedingly difficult to collect general items relating to this township, so we have to content ourselves with the amount given.

Centerville.—This is the oldest town of the township, and settlement was started by Mr. Archibald Maffett, who built the first house. About 1842 or 1843 Samuel Maffett and Thomas Newell put up a saw mill, and not long after a grist mill was added. Samuel French, about this time, started the first blacksmith shop of the vicinity. About 1850, town lots were laid off, the town was named Centerville, and a post-office was established. An old man living near the town, for some reason, gave it the homely nickname of Lickskillet, and we are glad to say that such name is going out of use. Mr. Young was probably the first postmaster, Mr. Brundel the first regular circuit minister, and Jane Maffett taught the first school. This was at one time quite a flourishing little village, but since the beginning of other towns near, it has been gradually declining. At present, however, there are two churches, Methodist Episcopal and United Brethren, a schoolhouse and three or four business houses. Mr. Edward Bates has a store-building in the town.

White Heath.—Mr. Porter Heath bought the land White Heath was laid out on of Mr. Frank White, and for a stock company. We suppose the town was named in honor of these two gentlemen. The town was laid out about 1872, and Mr. Heath thinks that James Webster put up the first dwelling-house in the town, and he was also the first postmaster. Miss Frank and Mr. Vin. Williams put up the first hotel and opened the first store of the place. Dr. Unangst and Dr. Henrie are the only physicians who have located in the town. At present there are five or six business firms in White Heath. The Methodist Episcopal church was built several years ago. The town is in a good location, both in regard to railroad facilities and the situation of the ground.

Galesville.—This town was laid out on Mr. Rufus Calef's land, and was first called Calef's station. The name was changed to the present one in honor of Mr. Calef's mother, whose maiden name was Gale. The store building at the station was erected in 1876, by Mr. Calef, and the first residence was built and occupied by John Donlan. The post-office was established in 1876, and Wilber Alvord was the first postmaster. The depot was built in 1877, but has recently been destroyed by fire. Galesville has over fifty inhabitants. Improvements are being made continually, so that we anticipate a continued growth in the town.

Lodge.—The station known by this name was situated about half a mile below the crossing of the Chicago division of the Wabash and the Havana branch of the same road, and the postoffice was located at this place. This crossing referred to was named Woods, in honor of superintendent Wood, of the Chicago division of the Wabash. After the postoffice was moved from Lodge to Woods, the postoffice department refused to change the name of the postoffice, and hence the town at the junction of these roads, took the name of Lodge.

CHAPTER XXIV.

BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES.

MR. JOHN ARGO was born in Pennsylvania, in 1793. He moved from Pennsylvania to Ohio, and during the war of 1812 volunteered for a few months to relieve Fort Meiggs. He now receives a pension of $96 a year. His brother Abraham was also in the war of 1812. Mr. Alexander Argo and wife, with David Argo, moved to Champaign county in 1835, where he died in 1836. Mrs. Argo died about 1859 at John Argo's. David Argo married Mary Shreve, settled in Champaign county, and has raised a large family of children, six of whom are living. He quite recently moved to Piatt county to take care of his brother, who is in poor health. John Argo came to Piatt county in 1840. He married Catharine Marsh, and had ten children, all but one of whom lived to reach maturity: Rebecca married Mr. Francis Sporrier, and lived in Sangamon township until she died, leaving four children; George Argo, who never married, died at the age of thirty years; Hester, the wife of Robert Osborn, died, leaving four children; one of her sons, John, married Mary Kinser, and lives on Mr. John Argo's place. Solomon Argo was married in 1865, to Mary Skillins, and has five children, Catharine, Rebecca J., Hannah, Charlie and Nellie. He owns 140 acres of land, and lives within a mile of his brother John's place; Mary J. married William Kennedy, and died, leaving four children, who are now in Kansas; Hannah, the wife of Hiram Stottler, died, leaving three children, two of whom, George and John, are in Mansfield; Evaline, who married Christopher McCloughen, is also dead; Alexander married

Amanda Vangundy, has five children, Sarah, John, Emmeline, Cora and George, and lives in Sangamon township; Nancy, the wife of James Coffin, died, leaving three children, who are with their father, who married again, and is living in Sangamon township. Mr. John Argo has been married three times. His second wife was Mrs. Susan Ellis, and Mrs. Martha McKinley became his third wife. She died in 1881. Mr. Argo is growing quite feeble, but his hearing seems as good as it ever was. Since writing the above we have learned of Mr. Argo's death.

MR. J. E. ANDREW, White Heath, moved from Ohio, his native state, to Illinois in 1866, locating in 1869 in Piatt county, where he now owns seventy acres of land. He lives in Sangamon township, and has held several township offices. He married Fannie H. Heath in 1872, and has four children, Marion, Arthur, Nettie and John. Mr. Andrew went to the war when but a boy, and served through two years. Being wounded twice, he still bears evidence of his army life, because of which fact he receives a pension. He was in the battles of the Atlanta campaign and those of the 'march to the sea.' Mr. Andrew was recently elected sheriff of the county.

MR. THOMAS A. BRANCH, for a number of years a resident of Piatt county, was born in Buckingham county, Virginia, in 1808. Mrs. Branch, née Elizabeth Robinson, was born in Smith county, Tennessee, in 1811. In 1828 Mr. Branch left Virginia and traveled on foot five hundred miles to Monroe county, Kentucky, where he met his future wife. They tell the following stories of themselves. Before leaving Virginia Mr. Branch had his fortune told, and he was informed that he would 'travel a long distance on foot, cross water, and finally meet a young lady who was to be his future life companion.' True enough he did travel a long distance and finally reached a Mr. Robinson's, where he asked for work. In the meantime a certain Elizabeth Robinson had had her fortune told, and she was informed that when she first saw her future husband he would be a "well-built, powerfully good-looking young man, in store clothes." One day, while about her household duties, she happened to glance out the window and spy the young man who had just asked for work of her father, sitting on the fence. She gave the young man in "store clothes" an earnest, searching look, and then with deep conviction said, "That's him." We will not attempt to say how it happened, whether it was the inevitable result of the fortune telling or whether it was simply that two congenial hearts attracted each other; but anyway, a marriage occurred May 27, 1830, and two lives were united for life. Elizabeth's marriage portion was a cow and a pony. In September, 1831, the couple left Kentucky for Springfield, Illinois, which place they reached the next month. On arriving at Springfield they had just $7.25. Mr. Branch traded his blind mare and cart for two cows, a flax wheel and a saddle, while she bought a hog and some meat with her money. They then began living in a small cabin, through the cracks of which "a dog could almost be thrown." They moved from Sangamon county to Piatt county, February 20, 1846. They reached here in a big snow-storm, and had to scoop the snow out of the house on Stringtown lane before moving into it. They moved from this place of George A. Patterson's to the Cline place, then to the ridge, and from there to the farm upon which is a grove which was then called Sheean's Grove. When they settled at this place there were no houses between them and Urbana. Mr. and Mrs. Branch have had twelve children, nine of whom were born before they owned any land. Mr. Branch remarked, as we interviewed him, that when he paid for his first forty acres of land he felt richer than he has ever felt since. Only five of their children are living. Of these, Angelina is the wife of M. L. Osburn, a carpenter of Seymour; she has had five children; Matilda, the wife of William Trotter, has five children; Sarah is the wife of Emanuel Rhoaders, of Monticello (see his name); Lizzie married W. T. Miller, and has two children. For many years Mr. Branch has been one of the successful farmers of Piatt county. He still owns 460 acres of land in the home-place. His place, when he bought it of Mr. Hubbart, was partially improved, but Mr. Branch has planted out a good many trees and has done other things toward putting it into a better condition. Mr. Branch was not only a farmer but he has done a great deal of good work as a minister in the vicinity of his home and county. In 1880 Mr. and Mrs. Branch celebrated their golden wedding. Some eighty guests were present, and it was averred that all had a truly happy time. Since writing the above we have been grieved to hear of the death of Mr. Branch. William L. Branch was married in 1861, to Jane Webb, who died. He married Mrs. Harris, née Emma Yeager, in 1873, and they have four children, James N., Lizzie A., Thomas A. and Charles A. Mrs. Harris had one son, William H.

MR. JOSEPH BLY, farmer, White Heath, is a native of Virginia, and his father was in the war of 1812. He came to Illinois in 1850, and has been in Piatt county ever since. He first rented land of Mr. Branch, until he bought his present home-place of forty acres. There was but a cabin on the place when he bought it, and he has made all the rest of the improvements. He was married about 1860, to Martha Jones née Bushee, a native of Ohio, but of French descent. She has four children living by her first husband. One daughter, Mrs. Susan Smoek, is living in this county. Two of her sons were in the army. Her sons, Albert and Charles Bly, are both at home. Her father, as was also Mr. Bly's, was in the war of 1812.

MR. HARVEY BENSON, farmer, was born in Ohio, near Springfield, in 1821. His father, Mr. Andrew Benson, was born in Virginia about 1781, and moved from that state to Ohio. He was married in 1810 or 1811, to Miss Sarah Renick, and had four children, three sons and one daughter. Of these but two are living, the subject of our sketch, and one brother who lives at Springfield, Ohio. In 1840 Mr. Benson passed through this county, went on to Missouri and bought land there. He came to this county about 1856, and after living here several years bought a portion of the land where he now lives. He owns and has improved a good-sized farm, and has been successful in raising stock. He was married in December, 1877, to Mrs. Mary Piatt, who died in May 1880.

SQUIRE H. E. BURNETT, formerly a resident of Piatt county, was born in New Jersey. He moved to Ohio in 1836, and in 1854 he came to Piatt county, where he remained until 1858. While living in Centerville he lost his wife. In 1857 he sold goods in Centerville, and at one time he was robbed of $340. Mr. Burnett helped to build the grist-mill at Centerville in 1854 or 1855. An old millwright, Wm. Lee, made the wheels and Mr. Burnett finished the inside of the mill. Mr. Burnett has been justice of the peace for twenty years at Mahomet, and still holds that office.

MR. ALVIN CALDWELL was born December 11, 1830, in Mercer county, Ohio. He is of Irish and English descent, and came to Piatt county October 24, 1849, and settled in what is now Sangamon township. His first purchase of land was in 1860, and in 1868 he bought the land he now lives on. On November 22, 1857, he married Mary E. Madden, who was born August 24, 1833, and has three children living, Laura, Grace and Alvin.

MR. JOHN HENRY COON, farmer, Monticello, was born in 1797, in Virginia. He moved to West Virginia and from there to Ohio when he was but thirteen years old, and in 1841 he moved to Piatt county. His father, Abraham Coon, and mother, née Catharine Hensil, moved to Piatt county about 1849, and lived with J. H. Coon for several years, when they died about five weeks apart. Abraham Coon was in the war of 1812, but he never received his land warrant. Mr. J. H. Coon came to this county and looked at the land before he bought it. He then moved out and liked the country from the first, but he did not like the living. He was not here long before he had to go to Chicago, and take two trips to Indiana in order to get something to eat and wear. The wolves were troublesome and the deer were quite plenty. Mr. Coon remembers of killing six deer in four days' time. Mr. Coon was married first in 1817, to Elizabeth Deeds, who was born in 1803 and died in 1824. They had three children, two of whom are now living. John married Eliza Schwisher, of Indiana; moved to Missouri, and died there. Jacob married Frances Mooney, has five or six children and lives in McDonough county, Illinois; William, a soldier in the late war, and prisoner for eleven months, married Susan Hughes, who died, leaving two children, now dead. He next married Priscilla Beasley. One son, Harvey, is living in this county. Mr. J. H. Coon was married again in 1826, to Ruth Clemens, who was born in 1809. She died in 1878, after having been in poor health for twenty-five years. Their son Abraham was first married to Drusilla Belanga, who died, leaving one child, Walter, who lives in Missouri. He next married Amanda Beasley, who died, leaving three children. Ruth, who is married; Ella was the wife of Amos Woolington, but died in 1881, leaving two children, and Austin. Mr. Coon took Susan Ellis for his third wife, and he was again married to Mrs. Sarah Pence, and lives in Cisco. Catharine married Samuel Furnace, who died, leaving seven children; Mrs. Furnace then married Jas. Blacker; Rebecca married Calvin Swisher, but died. Four children, Kate, Jane, John and Sam are still living. Martha Coon married Jas. Cable, but died leaving no family; Sarah Coon became the wife of Menassah Swisher and had two children, Medorah, the wife of Chas. Thompson and mother of six children, Willie, John, Frank, Ona M., Emma and Ida; and Daniel R. Swisher, who lives at home. Mrs. Swisher was married in 1868, to Edward Munea, a native of Indiana. His father came from France about forty-nine years ago.

MR. JACOB COON (deceased) was born in Virginia in 1802. He was married in that state in 1826, to Elizabeth Applegate. She was a native of New Jersey, but she, with her brothers and sisters, were partly reared in Ohio. Her parents died in Indiana. One brother, Jacob Applegate, and one sister, Mrs. Sarah Ross, came to Illinois in 1842. Mr. Coon's father moved from his native state, Pennsylvania, to Virginia, and from there he moved over the mountains on pack-horses to Ohio. He then moved to Illinois, and from there to Missouri, where he died. Mr. Jacob Coon moved in 1842, onto the place now owned by Mr. Spencer, but which was then Mr. Hughes' place. They wintered through that cold winter in a log house with clapboard doors. They had moved from a comfortable house, and Mrs. Holloway pronounces the change as having been just "awful." The next spring they went onto the place still owned by Mrs. Coon and her son. They built a good hewed log house, to which, at a later time, an addition was built. Mr. Coon was considered an excellent hewer, and was employed by many on account of his ability. About the first work he did after coming to the county was to prepare the timbers for the house Mr. Ezra Marquiss now lives in. After Mr. Coon enlarged their house they kept a country hotel for drovers for near twenty years. When the stage ran between Monticello and Champaign they kept the travelers and stage men for a time. The drovers called this house their home, and Mrs. Coon was noted as the woman who kept a barrel of pickles the year round. When Mr. Coon came to this county he brought about $1,000 and five or six head of horses. He entered sixty acres of land and bought about 260 acres. At the time of his death he owned about 200 acres of land. His son remarks that his principal exploit was hard work; and from what we hear, this exploit extended throughout his life. He was crippled in one hand. This was caused by the bite of a dog. Mr. and Mrs. Coon had two children born in Ohio, one of whom, Addison S., is still living, and in this county. He married Lufanny J. Buck, of DeWitt county, and has had four children: Orra married Louis Bartley, has two children, Charlie and Fannie, and lives on the old home-place; Emma married Nelson Bartley, and has two children, Nellie M. and an infant; Temperance and Homer Jacob are at home. Addison lives on part of his father's place, and has put most of the improvements on forty acres. He also owns 200 acres more. Mr. Jacob Coon died in 1872, and Mrs. Coon next married Mr. Samuel Ellerton. In 1880 she became the wife of Mr. Thomas Holloway, from Indiana. He went from that state to the army, was out three years, and was wounded on the raid under Sherman to the sea. He has received a pension since his discharge. He has been a school teacher in the west for several years. Michael Coon came to Piatt county in 1841, and is still living here. He has been twice married and a number of his children and grandchildren reside in the county.

MR. RUFUS CALEF (deceased) was a native of New Hampshire, from which state he moved to Peoria, and from there to Bunker Hill, Illinois. He next moved to St. Louis, and from there to Piatt county, where he and Mr. Henry Jacobs entered and bought near 3000 acres of land. When Mr. Calef came west he worked his way to Peoria, and was a hard worker all his life. He was married in Madison county, to Jean Galt, a native of Scotland. They lived in Piatt county a number of years, and until their death, the one dying in 1877 and the other in 1876. Two of their five children are living: Horace married Sadie White, and has three children: Jean, Roscoe and Besie. Arthur Calef is living at home with his brother. There are some 2,500 acres in the Calef place. Mr. Calef was a great stock dealer. Horace remembers that at one time there were 1900 head of cattle on the place, but is not positive as to whether this is the most that was ever on it or not.

MR. JOHN CLINE was a native of Pickaway county, Ohio. He was married in that state to Letitia Carry, a native of the same county. They moved directly to Piatt county in 1838. Mr. Cline's father, Jacob Cline, and several brothers and sisters, came out the spring of the same year. John Cline first settled about one mile from White Heath, where he lived, and owned 700 acres of land at the time of his death in 1860. He had six children, all of whom are living: John married Matilda Knott, and has two children, Ida and Della; James married Jennie Maffett and lives in Nebraska; Letitia married Warren Gould and had two children, Nelson and Eva; she next married J. Wm. Shannon, and lives in Philadelphia; Sarah, the wife of Thomas Plunk, lives about two miles from Monticello, and has six children, Wm., Thos., Albert, John, Chas., Robert, Louis and Harriet Pearl; J. H. Cline married Josephine Knott, and has four children, Anna, Minnie, Carrie and Ona L. He has been in the merchandise business in White Heath for over three years; Ezra Cline married Mell Knott and lives one mile northeast of White Heath. He has two children, Cora Alma and Ola Annis. He owns sixty acres of land, and is the last of the family to have an interest in the Cline farm. Mrs. Cline was married to Wm. Curl in 1869. His first wife died, leaving five children, two of whom live in Piatt county: Mollie, who married Mr. Frank White, and Milton, who was married last to Mrs. Susan Baker. Mrs. Curl now makes her home at Mr. Tho. Plunk's. In speaking of her early life in the county, she remarked that the log cabin into which they moved had a stick chimney, so old and worn out that the dogs could crawl in at either side, and that the doors of the house were made of clapboards. They made molasses from watermelons and beets, and made muskmelon butter. She remembers that the deer, and especially the timber-wolves, were quite plenty when she first came to the county. One of Mr. Wm. Wright's children was lost, and they supposed it was eaten by the timber-wolves. The child followed a pet deer off. Some bones were afterward found which were supposed to be those of the child.

MR. DANIEL CRESAP (deceased) was of English descent, and a native of Maryland. A history of the Cresap family has been written, and some of the old families have been somewhat noted in early American history. Mr. Daniel Cresap moved from Ohio to Piatt county about 1855, and settled on the old Piatt place near Monticello. After living there two years he moved to the Williams place in Champaign county, and thence to where Frank Cresap lives, just across the line in Champaign county. Mr. Cresap's first wife, nee Miss Marsh, had four children. Of these, Evaline, who was the wife of Mr. Reed in Ohio, is now dead; Clarinda, who was married, is also dead; Elvira, the wife of Mr. Edwin Cresap, is living in Champaign county; Elizabeth, who married James Vangundy, died, leaving one child. Mr. Cresap's last wife, nee Margaret Humes, had five children: Hamilton married Miss Campbell, but died in a few months after his marriage. His widow became the wife of Mr. Bishop, and lived in Piatt county for a time. She is now a widow again. Mr. B. F. Cresap married Sarah A. Vincent in Chicago in 1868, and has had five children, Nellie, Clara, Josephine, Wm. H. and Benj. F. Mr. B. F. or Frank Cresap went to the army from Piatt county in 1862, in Co. C of the 107th Ill. Inf. He went out as first lieutenant and was promoted to captain. He was in the siege of Knoxville, in Sherman's march to the sea, and was engaged in battles at Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Franklin and Nashville. At the battle of Resaca, one of the boys near him had his head shot off, and some pieces of his skull wounded Mr. Cresap in several places. This was the only time blood was drawn on him, and he was never taken prisoner while in the army. He was one of the members of the court martial during a winter and summer of the time he was in the war. Mary Cresap became the wife of B. F. Thomas, and lives in Champaign county; Daniel is married and lives in Missouri. Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Cresap both died on the place upon which Frank Cresap lives.

MR. TURNER CARTER, formerly a resident of Piatt county, now

The train having stopped on a bridge to get water, Mr. Marquiss got up before day to see to his stock. He fell on

His grandfather was in the revolutionary war through the entire time. His parents moved to Champaign county when he was six years old. They moved to Danville and remained until the fright about the Blackhawk war was over. Joseph began farming for himself before he was of age. He followed breaking prairie for a number of years. In connection with telling of his prairie breaking, he told an anecdote which we will relate. He and two others, as was customary in those times, took care to have a jug of whiskey with them when at their work. But let them hide their jug as carefully as they could, it was sure to be found and partially emptied by some children who lived near. At last they conceived a plan to thwart the children, and told a physician of Mahomet their desires, and he sent them some ipecac, with which they prepared a jug of whiskey especially for their little annoyers, and hid the jug somewhat carelessly. Their plan worked like a charm, and by the middle of the night, not only the children, but their mother, was suffering from the effects of the "jug." When the father came home in the night, he was furious enough to go and swear out a state's warrant against the men who he asserted had tried to poison the children. The trial came off, but as it was decided that the dose of ipecac was good for the children, the accused were acquitted. As a moral to this anecdote we will add: little children, and great grown people too, should beware of jugs. Mr. Joseph Maxwell started to California in 1850. He remained there until his health became poor and he was advised to return to the States. He came back at the end of twenty-six months with about $1,650 in his pocket. He bought a farm where his homestead now is, and was married in 1852 to Rosanna Hyde, a native of Indiana. They have had eleven children, eight of whom are living.

MR. JOHN MAXWELL, Joseph's brother, was also an early neighbor of the Piatt county folks. He is a native of Tennessee, and is now living in Champaign county. He used to be quite a deer hunter, and once had quite a narrow escape of his life. He came up to a deer in the snow and struck it with an ax; it turned and fought, but Mr. Maxwell gained the victory without realizing his danger until all was over. He told of finding a couple of deer locked together with their horns. One had died, and the other stood entangled with death. The one alive when found was finally killed, and 'twas almost impossible to separate the horns.

In about 1852 Mr. Mosgrove built a saw-mill, to which in 1855, or thereabouts, a grist-mill was added. The entire mill burned about 1859, but afterward a saw-mill was erected, the frame of which is still standing. Each of these mills has been known as the Mosgrove mill. Mr. Mosgrove had seven children, two of whom are living: William Mosgrove married Susan Shaffer in 1850. While her husband was in the army Mrs. Norris suffered many hardships. She often had to don her husband's old clothes and feed the stock. Once the old blind mare knocked her back into the sled and kicked the harness over her. She had to chop wood many times. When Mr. Isaac Norris first came to the county, and reached Mr. Ezra Marquiss, he showed his pocket-book, which contained just thirty cents. In addition to this he had two old horses, an old wagon and a "family of children." MR. JAMES NEWELL (deceased) was born and raised in Ohio, where he married Catharine Garty. He moved with his family, consisting of eight children, to Centerville, Piatt county, in 1857. Six of his children are now living: Dubois, who went from Piatt county to the army in 107th Ill. Inf., Co. D, is living with his brother Wesley, who married Alice Dyson in 1881, and farms in Sangamon township; Marilla, the wife of John Seaman, lives in Sangamon township, and has two children, Etta Florence and Claude; Martha makes her home at her brother Wesley Newell's; Eunice is the wife of Luke H. Hott. Mr. James Newell next married Elizabeth Kiser, who, since his death in 1868, has been living with their only child, Sarah Hester, who married Samuel Mackey. A brother of the subject of our sketch, Mr. Thomas Newell, came to this county at quite an early day, about 1855, and he, in partnership with Mr. Samuel Maffet, built and run the first saw and grist mill at Centerville. He, however, died about 1856, leaving wife and children, none of whom, so far as we can learn, are now living in Piatt county. One of his sisters was the first wife of Mr. Samuel Maffett, and another, Sarah, married Isaac Morrison, but none of their family are living in this county.

He had four children when he moved to this state. Samuel Oulery, born in 1825, in Pickaway county, Ohio, married Nancy Hannah, a native of the same state, and has had eight children. Thomas Albert died when twenty-two years old. Rachel Catharine, the wife of Frank Coon, has two children, Fannie I. and Myrtle, and lives near Cisco. Francis M., the wife of John Groves and mother of one son, Hugh Edward, lives near the Argo school-house. Nancy Rebecca married Thomas Coon, has one child, Maud, and lives near Cisco. Sarah Isabel lives at home. Mary R. married George McKinley and has one son, Sam'l Edward. Hugh N. and Clara are still at home. Mary J. Oulery married Mr. Levi Stewart (see his sketch). Francis Oulery became the wife of David Hannah. Rachel, who was the wife of George Mathews, died in 1864, leaving three children, James, Fannie and Sarah, who are not married. Mr. Mathews married Susan Hawk and with several children lives in Blue Ridge township. Mr. Nicholas Oulery was for a year and a half in the war of 1812. He was with Perry's fleet on the lake. He died in 1853. Mrs. Oulery lived until 1877, when she too was called home.

MR. NELSON REID, farmer, White Heath, a native of Ohio, moved to Piatt county in 1867. He had been in the county, however, in 1860 and served as a farm laborer for a time. He went back to Ohio, but returned in 1861 and enlisted in the army in Co. C of the 107th Ill. He was in the battles of Harper's Ferry, Resaca, Franklin, Knoxville and Nashville. Mr. Reid was married in Ohio, to Caroline Weaver, and has two children, Robert M. and James Nelson. He settled on the place he now lives on when he first moved to the county. He has improved the 100 acres mostly himself. In 1880 he built a neat six-room frame house and is fast making it one of the most pleasant homes in the township. Mr. Reid has been justice of the peace, town clerk, school treasurer, and was elected county treasurer in 1878 and served two years.

MR. WILLIAM RIDGLY, farmer, White Heath, is a native of Virginia, came to Illinois from Pennsylvania in 1855, locating in Sangamon township, where he has since lived. He owns 280 acres of land, which he has greatly improved, and in 1880 built a new barn. Three years ago he had one piece of corn which yielded ninety bushels to the acre. This is the third place he has partly improved. Mr. Ridgly was married to Louisa Castor, a native of Ohio, in 1857, and has five children, Frank L., a carpenter in Monticello, Charles H., John G., William S. and Jennie.

MR. DAVID ROBINSON was born in Ohio in 1830. His parents, who were of Irish descent, moved to Ohio, where they died. David is one of a family of thirteen children, who are still living. Four of them are in Piatt county. David moved to Piatt county from Ohio in September, 1851. He has been in the stock business and has farmed most of the time since. He was married in 1863, to Harriet Bowman, but has had no children.

MR. WESLEY P. SMITH, mail agent, Monticello, was born November 5, 1844, within a few miles of Monticello, and with the exception of four years has lived in the county ever since. He was united in marriage April 16, 1865, to Miss Hattie A. Hickman, a native of Ross county, Ohio, and has the following named children, Effie B., Corwin E., Agathie Dell, Mary Luella, Otie W., Earnest F., Allen R. and Edna H. Mr. Smith enlisted in the army October 10, 1861, in Co. D of the 3d Cav. Mo. Vols., Illinois' quota being already full. This company with others was taken by Col. Glover, although Illinois got the credit of sending out the men. Mr. Smith is quite proud of his regiment, although it was called the Missouri regiment. The principal work of the regiment was that of hunting guerillas and protecting life and property. This work was done in Missouri and Arkansas. Though taking part in some very close engagements they were always successful, never having been repulsed and having lost but few men. Mr. Smith was mustered out at Little Rock, Arkansas, November 30, 1864. In March, 1872, he received an appointment as mail agent on what was then known as the Monticello railroad and made the first run into Monticello. His present route extends from Lafayette, Indiana, to Quincy, Illinois. With the exception of about three years Mr. Smith has been in "Uncle Sam's" service since 1861. His present residence is about three miles north of Monticello on what is known as Father Hickman's place.

MR. ADAM SPEAR, farmer, Centerville, is a native of Pennsylvania. He moved to Indiana for a time, and thence in 1863 or 1864 to Piatt county. Alexander, Sarah Alberta, Wm. Curtiss and Rosetta.

Mr. Stewart died in 1864, leaving two children, only one of whom is now living. Hannah Francis, born in 1853, was married October 6, 1872, to Richard Miner. They have one daughter, Etta Rose, and live with Mrs. M. J. Stewart, who has lived on the present place ever since her marriage. Some of Levi Stewart's brothers and sisters married and settled in Piatt county, but they afterward moved away.

MR. WILLIAM H. SMITH is a native of Pickaway county, Ohio, and came to Illinois in 1840, moving to Piatt county in 1843. Here he married Julia A. Wright, who died, leaving four children, who still live in the county : Charles, who is still unmarried, owns a farm of 280 acres within two miles of White Heath ; he was in the late war, in Co. D, 63d Ill. Vols., and fought at the siege of Vicksburg, battles of Bentonville and Mission Ridge ; Mary, who married William Dawson, lives in Mansfield ; Sarah is the wife of Vincent Williams, and John, having married Jane Camp, is farming at Centerville. Mr. William Smith was again married, to Barbara Dawson, by whom he has had five children : James, Frank, Edward, Isaac, and a daughter of about ten or eleven years.

MR. JACKSON TROTTER, farmer, White Heath, was born in Virginia in 1825, and is of German and Irish descent. He moved to Ohio when young, and in 1847 came alone to Piatt county. In 1855 his father, William Trotter, and mother, nee Barbara Dick, came to this county in company with their children. His father died in 1863, and his mother in 1865. One of their daughters, Rebecca, makes her home with Jackson, who has never yet succumbed to the wiles of Cupid ; John married Elizabeth Teets ; Elijah married Alice Swetzer, of Indiana, and has five children living ; William Trotter married Matilda Branch ; Hiram Trotter married Susan Stotler, who died, leaving three children ; he next married Lydia Olman, and has six children ; his home is also in Champaign county.

MR. MATTHIAS TEATS, farmer, White Heath, was born in Ohio, and moved from there to Illinois about 1856. He owns forty acres of land near Camp Creek church. Mr. Teats was married in Ohio, to Mary Puffinbarger, and four of their five children are living : Maria is the wife of Harvey Hickman ; Mary E. married J. Trotter ; Jane married Jesse Bushee, a farmer who lives in White Heath, and has two children, Clarinda and Estella ; Caroline Teats died when sixteen years old ; George stays with his father.

DR. W. B. UNANGST, White Heath, is a native of Pennsylvania. Both of his parents, who were from the same state, are dead. Dr. Unangst moved from Pennsylvania to Coles county, Illinois, in 1861. He located at Centerville in 1866, and in 1874 he moved to White Heath. He attended medical lectures at Chicago, but graduated in the College of Physicians and Surgeons at Keokuk, Iowa. He is a member of the Masonic lodge.

MR. ISAAC V. WILLIAMS (deceased), farmer, White Heath, was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, in 1811, and moved from there to Piatt county about 1835. After living here for a time moved over the line into Champaign county, where he lived for a number of years. He then moved to Monticello, where he lived twelve years, finally locating where his widow now lives, a farm of 194½ acres, which she owns with the children. Mr. Williams married Mary Ann Mallory in 1833, a native of Harper's Ferry, Virginia, and but three of their nine children are living. Frank, their eldest daughter, has kept a hotel at White Heath for a number of years. She owns the hotel. A. Rebecca married Renick Hull, who was frozen to death on the prairie, in Goose Creek township. He left one daughter, Mary, who has been attending school at Decatur. Rebecca next married Edward Bates, who has a general merchandise store at Centerville. They have five children living, Lilian, Fanny, William, Janet and Edward. Mr. Bates was in the late war, and now gets $40 per month pension. Vin Williams, her only son, is a hotel-keeper in Mansfield. He married Miss Smith. Mr. Isaac Williams died January 3, 1879. When Mrs. Williams crossed through Sadorus to Mr. Piatt's her experience was far from pleasant. When three miles on the other side of Sadorus, in the big slough, their wagon broke, and they had a serious time getting out and to Sadorus. Soon after their arrival there, some one knocked and it was Joe Mallory, who had started three weeks before and was stalled on another road across the same slough. The women folks of Joe's party walked to Sadorus and the next morning started to Mr. Piatt's. It was very cold, and Mr. Williams covered the women with a feather bed to protect them from the cutting winds. On reaching the Okaw they found it a mile wide, and frozen. The sore-footed oxen had a serious time until helped out by a horse, and they finally reached the Piatts'. While there they saw the trees full of prairie-chickens, but Mr. Piatt and William said they were not as good to eat as crows. Mrs. P. Williams learned to cook them, and was complimented by Maj. McReynolds. At another time Mrs. Williams went to Mrs. Souders to get some blue dye, and stayed to supper. It was later than she supposed, and going home the darkness of the woods and howling of the wolves, together with her loneliness, greatly frightened her, and upon reaching home she exclaimed, "I will never undertake to dye as long as I live," a remark which James Piatt, who was there, teased her about as long as he lived.

Mr. J. M. WHITE, farmer, was born in Franklin county, Ohio, in 1817. His father, who served in the war of 1812, was born and raised in Virginia, and his mother was a native of Pennsylvania. He is of Scotch and German descent, and is the only surviving child of his father's family. He was married in 1843, to Jane Huffman, who afterward died, leaving two children, Ophelia J., wife of Thomas Moffitt, and Frank, who went to the army from Ohio, and was married in 1867, to Mary Curl, and is now living in Sangamon township, the father of two boys, Harry and Frank. Mr. J. M. White was again married in 1849, in Pickaway county, Ohio, to Miss Rebecca Williams, a native of that county, and a sister to Mr. Isaac Williams. Their five children are all living: one, Vincent, is mining in Colorado; Benjamin, who married Sallie Seymour, lives in Sangamon township and has three children, Edwin G., Bennie Renick and Bessie; Sadie W., who was educated at St. Mary's, is the wife of Horace Calef; John M. and Mary, who attended school at Sisters of Notre Dame, are both living at home. Mr. White came to this county in 1864, and bought his present home farm of 307 acres, near White Heath, of Aaron and Sylvester Sprague. Game was still very abundant, and many incidents are related of hunting foxes, wolves, shooting chickens, snipe and other wild game. Mr. White relates a rather amusing incident of fox hunting in company with Henry Harris and Mr. Seymour. They scared a fox into a hole and Mr. White followed in pursuit. After coming to first one skunk and then another, he came to the object of his search, and succeeded in cutting off the fox's tail. The fox, however, escaped without further injury, and was known for years as the "bob-tailed fox of Sangamon."

MR. CASPER WACK (deceased) was born June 13, 1812, in New Jersey. He moved from his native state to Fulton county about 1839. From that county he came to Piatt county in 1868. Mr. Wack was quite a public-spirited man and did a great deal to improve his portion of the township. He was a carpenter and put up his own buildings on his place. There are 160 acres in the home-place now, and it is all under cultivation. There are a good many forest trees planted on the place and the fruit is abundant. Mr. Wack was married in Virginia, to Mary Jane Linabery. Of their children, William G. married Emily Sherman, in Henderson county; they have three children, W. G. and Casper and Isabella (twins), and live in Blue Ridge township; Sarah Ann, who was the wife of Mr. B. Metcalf, died, leaving three children, Letitia, the wife of Olonzo Love, Kate and Anna; Jacob Wack married Harriet Easterday; he died in 1880, leaving his wife and two children; Caroline died when twenty-eight years old; Abigail is the wife of John Davis, of Blue Ridge township, and has four children, Jesse, Mary, Margaret and William; George L. Wack married Letitia Ashley and lives on the home-place; Casper married Lizzie Ashby, has two children, Garrett J. and Wallace, and lives in Blue Ridge township; Francis is living in Mansfield. Mr. Casper Wack, the subject of our sketch, was married in 1858, to L. Ann Wyckoff, who survives her husband and is living on the farm. Mr. Wack died March 21, 1881.

MR. HARRISON WOLF, farmer, White Heath, was born in Ohio. His father was from Pennsylvania and his mother from Virginia. He moved from his native state direct to Piatt county in 1851, and settled about one mile from where he now lives. He owns about 230 acres of land, and has resided on his present home farm for nine years. He was married in Ohio, to Catharine Esrey, who died leaving one child, Sarah, who is now the wife of Mr. Tho. Marvin. Mr. Wolf took for his second wife Anna Heath née Porter; she, too, died, leaving three children. Of these, James, a soldier in the late war, married Rachel Wrench, has one son, James Edward, and makes his home with his father; Taylor married Louisa Wrench, lives in Sangamon township, and has five children, Irwin, Anna Mary, Iowa May, Lizzie and Rachel; John C., who has been in the county ever since he was two years old, was married in 1874, to Augusta McAfee, and has one son, William Howard.

MR. HENRY C. WILSON, farmer, Monticello, is a native of Ohio. He moved from there to Piatt county, Illinois, in 1866. He married Gettis Bowdre, and has three children. He went to the late war from Ohio and was out three years. He was in the second battle of Bull's Run, at Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. He was taken prisoner at Chancellorsville and was in Libby prison for six weeks. For the first week or two in prison he had nothing to eat each day except a piece of corn bread about the size of a hand. For the rest of the time he had a smaller piece of bread and some soup made from mule meat. He remarked that he "had to hold his nose while eating the soup." A great many of the prisoners had scrofula terribly. He was paroled and sent back to his regiment. He was wounded at Gettysburg and was sent to the West Philadelphia Pennsylvania hospital. He was shot with an ounce ball, which passed between the fourth and fifth rib on the left side, through the body and out at the side of the backbone. In October, 1861, he took down with typhoid fever at Fairfax, Virginia, and did not know anything until April, 1862. He was reported dead at home and at his regiment, but, though when recovered he was reduced from one hundred and fifty to ninety pounds weight, he went on and served his time out.

MR. W. H. ZUMWALT, farmer, Farmer City, is a native of Indiana, from which state he moved to Iroquois county, Illinois. He came to Piatt county in 1879, and is now living on Mr. D. Roberts' place. F of the 25th Ill. reg., and was in battles at Pea Ridge, Corinth, Stone River and Chickamauga. He was wounded at the latter place and now receives a pension.

CHAPTER XXV.

BLUE RIDGE TOWNSHIP.

THIS township lies in the extreme northern part of the county, and though not containing the amount of timber some of the other townships have, it has a fine location and contains a large amount of rich tillable land. It received its name probably from the fact that a ridge, which in the distance looks blue, extends in the northern and northeastern part of the township. The land in the eastern part drains into Madden's Run, that of the southern part into Goose creek, while Salt creek receives the drainage of the northwestern part of the township.

This township has a great number of artificial groves of trees, which are of great use, and add much beauty to the general appearance of the land. The efforts of the citizens in preparing these groves are certainly praiseworthy.

Two railroads pass through this township. The Chicago division of the Wabash enters the township about four miles west of the southwest corner of the township, passes toward the northwest and leaves the township about one mile west of its northwest corner. The Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western road crosses the eastern boundary line about two miles north of the southeastern corner of the township, extends northwest and leaves the township a little above the middle of its western boundary line. These roads intersect at the town of Mansfield.

Early settlement.—We could not obtain a great deal of information in regard to the first settlement of the township. First settlements, however, were made long after those in Monticello township. Among the names of the early settlers, we can mention Wm. Pierce, Richard Webb, Jacob Denning, Joseph Aikens, Noah Coffman, Squire Gillespie, LaFayette Cox, James Watson, Mr. Keenan, the Thomas brothers, and Mr. Littleton, besides several others. It is reported to us that Mr. Wm. Pierce began the improvements near Gardner Switch, and that the farm-house near said station is the first house of the township. Isaac Thomas reported that Dulsina Webb, who died about 1850, was the first one who died in the neighborhood of Gardner Switch. The first birth was probably Mary Watson. The first election was held at Stringtown school-house, the first one of the township, and as late as 1858, when the men went to vote they carried stakes to fasten their horses to. The first election after the township organization was held on the Littleton place. The first preaching at the Stringtown school-house was by Minor Chew, while Messrs. Crandall and Stoddard were latter ministers.

Mansfield.—Gen. J. L. Mansfield moved, in 1870, to his farm upon which he laid out the town, which was named in his honor. This gentleman did a very great deal in the way of donations and in using his influence for the advancement of the town. His death was much lamented, and the growth of the town was thereby retarded.

The first birth in the place was that of Josephine Ruch, a daughter of Uriah Ruch. Dr. J. J. Tremble was the first physician, and Dr. Scott came not long after him. The first Sunday school was held October 16, 1870, in Gen. Mansfield's dining-room. After this the Sunday school was held in the depot. In 1871 Mr. Bailey built and opened the first store of the town. Sam'l Alexander opened the second store in 1873. This store was owned by Alexander, Taylor & Co.

Churches.—It was probably through the influence of Mrs Mansfield more than that of any one else that the Episcopal church was erected about 1873 or 1874. 'Tis a neat little chapel, and a credit to the town. In 1870 a minister was obtained from Champaign, and since that time missionary ministers have been employed. Albert E. Wells was the first minister.

The Methodist church was the next one erected, and Horatio S. Beavis was reported as the first Methodist minister of the town.

The United Brethren next began a church building, but about 1879 the Presbyterians bought them out and finished the building in 1880.

The I.O.O.F. lodge was organized in September, 1875, and the first meeting was held in the George Harver building. Jno. Burford, T. C. Wrench, Jas. H. Frieze, W. H. French, James Wolf, Levi Wolf and L. Clouser were charter members. The recent place of meeting has been over F. H. Ross' store; there are fifty-eight members, and the society is doing good in helping the poor.

Mansfield to-day is a growing town of over 400 inhabitants, has a good location, and is destined to become quite a town. It contains over a dozen business firms, and several new business houses have been recently erected. Mansfield has the neatest post-office in the county.

Lindsay chapel, in the northern part of Blue Ridge township, was built about 1877. Mr. Wm. Lindsey donated the land and some money for the building.

Stations.—Blue Ridge and Van Meter stations are situated above Mansfield, on the Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific railroad. Both are shipping points for grain. The former station was established in 1877 and the post-office soon after. About 500,000 bushels of grain were shipped from Blue Ridge last year. Van Meter station was named for the Van Meter family.

Gardner station is on the Indianapolis, Bloomington & Western railroad, and is another good shipping point.

They had an engagement with Longstreet's forces in November at Huff's Ferry, another engagement at Campbell Station. At the siege of Knoxville, which lasted two months, they had scarcely clothes or rations. He was also in the battles of Resaca, Grapevine Mountain, Kenesaw Mountain, Lost Mountain, where so many men were lost, and Atlanta and others. They then turned back to Nashville, which was the last fight his regiment had. He was neither wounded or taken prisoner, but had his hat shot and clothes cut.

He moved from New York to Illinois in 1866 and to Piatt county in 1872, at which time he settled in Mansfield and has been here ever since. They had eleven children, nine of whom are living. Their son, David, took as his first wife Eliza Parrott, who died, leaving four children, Hannah F., Albert, Jesse and Annie. He next married Elizabeth Toy, and has one child, Beecher. Nelson Clouser went to California before he was twenty years old, married Jemima Norris, and remained seventeen years, but now has eleven children, and lives in Sangamon county: Jemima became the wife of Allen Parrott, has seven children, and lives in Champaign county; Jesse Clouser was first married to Ann Boyer, who died, leaving one daughter, Laura, who married Frank Pittman. Mr. Clouser next married Eliza Dehart, and has the following named children: Ella, Emma, the wife of Jackson Caldwell, Jennie, Alta, May, Emerson, Roy, and an infant. He is now living on his father's old place. John Clouser married Jane Beckett, has two children, and is a physician in Farmer City; George, who was in the late war, married Maggie Crockett, and is now a real estate agent in Kansas City; Ly-sander Clouser married Sally Haines, has one son, Willie, and is a stock shipper in Mansfield; Sarah E. was united in marriage August 28, 1862, to Louis Lanum, a native of Ohio. They have lived in the county ever since 1862, and now have four children, Ida Alma, Mary Leota, Wilbur F. and Louis V., and live on the home-place with Mr.

and Mrs. Clouser. Jennie and Samuel Reid attended Mr. Lanum and Sarah at their wedding. Those present were very much surprised to see the attendants step forward and be united in marriage (see Mr. Reid's name).

MR. SAMUEL CLOUSER, stock shipper, Mansfield, is a native of Ohio, and came with his father to this county. He moved into Mansfield about 1873, and began stock trading then, and is the only stock shipper located in Mansfield. He ships principally to eastern markets, the poultry alone amounting to $3,000. Mr. Clouser was married in 1866, to Sarah Haynes, a native of Ohio, and has one son, William Martin. Mr. Clouser is a trustee of the village, and owns his residence, which was built in 1878, and two lots.

MR. LAFAYETTE COX, farmer, Farmer City, was born in Indiana in 1824. His mother, née Lucinda Sherrill, born in 1800, is living with Mr. Cox. Her people were among the early settlers of Kentucky, and she has been in this county twenty-four years. Mr. Cox moved from Indiana to Piatt county in 1855, settled on his present home-place, and entered one-half a section of land. He now owns a farm of 480 acres, which is well improved and which has a public road all around it. It is one of the nicest appearing farms in the county. Several groves of trees, about twenty acres, have been planted, and add very much to the appearance of the place. A good-sized and neat looking frame house has been erected, which, with other improvements, impresses one with the idea that this is a genuine home. In 1854 this land, in connection with other land, was entered by James M. and Louis Blasdel, Mr. H. Jackson and Mr. Cox, at fifty cents an acre. Fifty dollars an acre would come nearer the worth of the land at the present time. Mr. Cox was married in 1845, to Melissa Blasdel, a native of Indiana. Nine of their thirteen children are living: Nannie M. married William Shanklin, has four children, and lives in Santa Barbara county, California. Mr. Shanklin was in the late war, and moved to California about eighteen years ago; Thomas William married Sebra Smith, of Indiana, has four children, and lives in Champaign county; Mary L., was the first wife of J. Richard Robinson. Mr. Robinson next married Mary A. Mote, and lives in Blue Ridge township; Eleanor J., the wife of Major Blasdel, a soldier in the army, has four children, Ora, Ira, Leo and an infant, and lives in Blue Ridge township; John J. is living at home; Bettie E. married Asa Smith (see his name); Frank H. and wife, née Luella Carr, live in Blue Ridge township; Linnie May is the wife of Ralph Smith, of the same township; Lou A., Adelia

F. and Emma O. are still at home. Mr. Cox has an interesting and a happy home. The inmates cheerfully perform home duties, and at the same time have a characteristic way of showing hospitality to strangers.

MR. JOHN CAMPBELL, farmer, Farmer City, is a native of Ohio. He moved to Logan county in 1866, and in 1874 he bought a farm of over two hundred acres, which has been his home for the last two years. The place was partially improved when bought, but he has made some improvements and anticipates making more. The place is hedged all around, and about four hundred and forty trees have been planted. Near fifteen thousand tile, about the first in that part of the township, were shipped from Indiana and put into the farm. Mr. Campbell has not yet succumbed to the wiles of Cupid. At the present time Mr. Samuel Dimm, wife and sons, Frank P. and Simon, are living on the place. In December, 1880, Frank Dimm returned from Nebraska in a wagon. He was twenty days on the road, suffering some hardships because of the extreme cold weather. He met his parents in this county, and immediately began to make a home for them. Simon has been teaching since coming to the county.

REV. M. CREWS, Mansfield, is a native of Lauderdale county, Mississippi; moved from there to Alabama about 1858, thence to Illinois in 1872, locating in McLean county, and in 1878 came to Piatt county and settled on the place where he now lives, near Van Meter Switch. He received his theological education at Greensborough, Alabama; was licensed to preach in 1860, and ordained deacon in 1868. He preached in southern Illinois before going to Heyworth, Mc Lean county. At present he has two appointments, one in Mansfield, the other at Wesley Chapel, which was completed in the fall of 1878, and was built by subscription. Mr. Crews belongs to the Southern Methodist church. On March 7, 1882, his friends made a purse of $100 in gold, invited him down to supper, when it was presented to him by the banker. Mr. Crews has a congregation of twenty members belonging to the Southern Methodist Episcopal church. By request he preaches sometimes in the Presbyterian church. While in McLean county he was tax collector for two years. Mr. Crews was married December 24, 1878, to A. R. Van Meter. The Van Meter ancestors came over in some of the vessels which brought the Stuyvesants of New York.

MR. EDWIN P. CUNNINGHAM, farmer, Mansfield, is a native of Missouri, from which state he moved in 1865 or 1866 to Virginia. He settled in Piatt county in 1870. He was married in 1876, to Isa Clark, a native of Illinois, and has two children, Lutie Belle and Clark.

MR. AMOS DICKSON (deceased) was born in 1804. His father, Moses Dickson, was one of the pioneers of Illinois, and settled in Vermilion county about 1824. The subject of our sketch, when a young man, worked in the salt works northwest of Danville. The early settlers of this county used to get their salt at this place. He also worked in the Galena lead mines. In 1842 he settled in Champaign county, and in 1850 he moved nearly onto the western line of the county. Part of his farm, 160 acres, extended into Piatt county. His son, John Dickson, is now living on this place. At the time of his death Mr. Amos Dickson was living with his daughter, Mrs. Josh Smith. He had made his home here for the last fifteen years. On June 29, 1881, he started, as the family supposed, to go to a neighbor's house. At night when he did not return a search was made for him, and at last he was found dead, lying face downward on top of the water at his old bathing place in the Sangamon river.

MR. JOHN M. DICKSON, farmer, Mansfield, is a native of Vermilion county, Illinois. His father moved to Champaign county when John was six years of age. Mr. Dickson moved into Piatt county December 10, 1861, and settled in section 24, and in 1868 he moved onto the place where he now lives, in section 13. He owns 240 acres of land, upon which he has put most of the improvements. Over two hundred fruit trees, several hundred forest trees and a good deal of hedge have been planted. Both open and tile ditches have been made. In 1881 he built a fine frame house of nine rooms. This house is planned differently from most of the houses in the county, and it certainly presents a very nice appearance. The place bids fair to be one of the best in the county. Mr. Dickson and Miss L. J. Lanum were united in marriage in 1861, in Fayette county, Ohio. Three of their five children are living, Elva Lucella, Clara D. and Charles Clark. Mr. Dickson has not succeeded in keeping out of all the offices. He has been school director for a number of years. Since preparing the above some items were forwarded by Mr. Dickson, from which we condense the following: Early in September, 1881, Mr. Dickson completed his new $2,500 residence, and had it partially furnished. On September 5, the twentieth anniversary of their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Dickson were invited to take dinner and spend the day with their cousin, Wm. Myers, some five miles distant. Upon their return home in the evening they were astonished to be received in their own residence by one hundred and fifty guests, who had assembled to celebrate their anniversary. The daughters, who remained at home through the day, helped to make the surprise more complete. The bride and groom of twenty years' standing were soon attired in the identical wedding garments of twenty years ago. Even the "sky-scraper" bonnet was not forgotten. Numerous presents were brought forward and presented by Rev. J. Montgomery, and were kindly received by Mr. and Mrs. Dickson. A bountiful supper was served, and after enjoying themselves thoroughly, and examining the new residence from cellar to the observatory on top, the guests left the happy couple with many protestations of good will and sincere wishes for a long and happy life.

MR. WILLIAM DAWSON, blacksmith, Mansfield, is a native of Fairfield county, Ohio, from which state he moved to Piatt county, October 16, 1856, and has remained in the county ever since. He moved to Mansfield in November, 1875, and at present owns a house and two lots in the place. For nearly two years he kept the hotel near the depot. He was married February 18, 1866, to Mary Smith, a native of Piatt county. They have had five children, Elenora S., George C., Ella, William J. and Blanch. Mr. Dawson went to the army, April 19, 1861, in Co. C of the 21st Ill. Vols. He was mustered in April 26, 1861, and came out of the war July 5, 1864. He was in the following battles: Frederickstown, Shiloh, Perrysville, Stone River and Chickamauga. According to a record kept by an adjutant, the regiment traveled some fifteen thousand miles during the war. Mr. Dawson was slightly wounded at Stone River. He was taken prisoner September 20, 1863, and was paroled March 20, 1864. He was in prison at Atlanta, Richmond, Belle Island, and was in Libby prison. He, in common with other war prisoners, complains that his treatment was rough.

MR. HENRY DAWSON, furniture dealer, Mansfield, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Illinois in 1856, at which time his people settled on Mr. Phillips' place. For twenty-six years previous to moving to this county he had been a cattle-drover. He shipped seventy-two droves of cattle to New York city alone, and no telling how many to other places. He bought his present farm of 160 acres in 1858, and has put all improvements on it. It is now divided by fences into nine fields. The Chicago division of the Wabash railroad runs through the farm, and Blue Ridge station is half a mile from the dwelling house. A good orchard of at least seventy-five or eighty trees is on the farm. Mr. Denning was married in 1858, to Phœbe Martin, a native of Somerset county, New Jersey. They have had no family. Mr. Denning was school trustee for five years, school director eight years, and has been pathmaster three or four times.

The place has yielded fair crops. In 1881 the average in corn was forty bushels to the acre. He was married in 1870, to Sarah N. Thompson, who died in 1875, leaving two children, Fred and John Delbert. He was married again in 1878, to Mary B. Orr. Mr. Evans was school treasurer for about five years, and has been roadmaster and pathmaster. He went to the army from Ohio in Co. A of the 70th Ohio, and was out a year and a half. He Fairbanks, who has been a grain merchant of Mansfield for several years, and Wm. D. Fairbanks own about 500 acres of land in this county.

MR. HARMON K. GILLESPIE, farmer, Farmer City, is a native of Pennsylvania. His parents were from the same state and died in Illinois. He moved from Pennsylvania to McLean county, Illinois, and in 1854 entered 120 acres adjoining his present home-farm in Piatt county. For two years he lived in the 12×15 feet house he first built. The next house he built contained seven rooms, and a part of it still stands in a large grove of maple, cottonwood and ash trees near Mr. Gillespie's last residence, which contains eleven rooms, and was built in 1870. He has gradually added to his farm, until now he owns 575 acres in good condition. When he first began improvements on his place he endured a good many hardships. The firewood and all fencing material had to be hauled from near Mahomet, across unbridged streams and over bad roads. Mr. Gillespie was married in 1845, to Nancy Moore, a native of Pennsylvania. They have had nine children, all of whom are living: Christian married Ella Davidson, has two children and lives in McLean county; George Moore married Ollie Crawford, has two children, Belle Irene, and an infant, and lives in Blue Ridge township; Ann D., the wife of Philip Weedman,

He remembers the first couple he married. He was living in their first little house, above referred to, and he was sitting on the floor, with chips all around him, making a wagon-wheel, when at about ten o'clock at night a knock was heard at the front door. His wife went to the door and found a couple who wished to be married. There was no step to the door, and Mrs. Gillespie turned to place a chair out for the young lady to climb up on, but she was not quick enough, for, as the Squire expressed it, the "lady was so anxious to enter the 'new state' that she rolled in at the door." The couple would not be seated long enough for the wheel-chips to be cleared away, but stood anxiously up in the midst of the dirt and were made one and happy.

MR. ISAIAH HOLLOWAY, farmer, Galesville, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Indiana, where he was partly reared. In 1862 he moved to Piatt county, and during the first winter lived in a shanty. After renting land for two years he moved onto the place he now lives on, which he had bought before coming to the county. He owns about 190 acres of land, upon which has put all the improvements, including the planting of one hundred and fifty apples and near two thousand other trees. He is one of the first settlers in his part of the township, and considers that a very great improvement has been made since he came to the county. His wife was one of the heirs, and the land was entered in her name. When he first settled in the county he used to travel seventeen miles to market, and got ten cents a bushel for corn. He remembers of once taking a load of corn to Urbana: it took him two days to go and come, and he got just four dollars for his labor. One of his neighbors went to the same market, and received just enough money to buy a pair of breeches, which were stolen before he got home. Mr. Harwood's first wife, née Marion Wallace Chilton, died in Mahomet, leaving one daughter; Lucretia married Mr. William C. Crabtree in 1871, has one child, Ada Wallace, and lives in Blue Ridge township. Mr. Harwood next married Anna Abbott. One daughter is living, Clara C., who married Mr. R. B. He moved to Mansfield in May, 1873, built residence and owns two lots, which he improved himself. Two years ago he gathered over 3,000 bushels out of a forty-acre field of corn. He was married in 1870, to Margaret Bettis, and has had three children, Willie, Eddie and Kate. He went to the army from DeWitt county, in Co. F of the 41st reg. The principal battles in which he engaged were those of Fort Donelson, Shiloh,

In 1854 Hiram Jackson entered the land Mr. Clark is now living on in the northwestern part of Blue Ridge township, and settled upon it. Of late years he has been living in Farmer City. Mr. Jackson was one of a family of ten, and was the only one of the ten who made Piatt county his home. He was married in December, 1837, to Ruth Blasdell. They have had fourteen children, seven of whom are living: Miss Rhoda Jackson is a successful milliner and dress-maker in Monticello; Isaac Alonzo, who went to the army in the 2d Cav., married Hester Adaline Smith, has four children and lives in Champaign county; E. H. Jackson married Alice Smith, has three children, Mark, David H. and Nancy E., and lives in Piatt county; Ruth Melissa married William M. Only about four families lived on the state road when Mr. Jackson settled in the township. Mr. Jackson has held quite a number of offices in his time. MR. THOMAS JESS came from Indiana to Piatt county in 1860. He is a native of Ireland. He went to the late war in 1861, and again in 1863 from Champaign county. He engaged in the battles of Perrysville, Chickamauga, Resaca, Kenesaw Mountain, Sand Town Roads, Jonesboro and Atlanta. He was wounded at the Seven Houses, between Jonesboro and Atlanta. He thinks the battle of Chickamauga was the most terrific fight he was in. They found some of their men three months afterward and buried them. As a result of his labors in the cause of his country, Mr. Jess is minus one limb. Since returning from the war he was made collector for two years and assessor of Blue Ridge township nine years.

MR. DANIEL R. KLINGER, farmer, Mansfield, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Champaign county in 1857. In 1858 he moved into Blue Ridge township, and has lived there ever since. He bought a portion of his home-place in 1862, and added to it at a later date, so now he owns 240 acres of land. In 1862 this land was rated at $2 an acre, but now at the least it is worth $40. The year before he moved onto the place he could have bought a half section of land for $800, and would have been allowed to give his team, worth $400, in partial payment, but was advised by persons living near not to invest. In less than three years one of his advisors paid $2,000 for a one-quarter section of the same land. The spring Mr. Klinger began breaking up his farm he could count fifteen or twenty teams about him, all engaged in breaking prairie. He has put all the improvements on his place. Two hundred fruit trees have been planted, a good deal of open ditching has been made and a two-story frame house has been built. The following record will show that Mr. Klinger has met with a good degree of success as a farmer. In 1881 he had twenty acres of oats, which averaged sixty bushels to the acre. Two years ago his crop of wheat averaged thirty-seven bushels to the acre. A crop of 120 acres of corn averaged forty bushels to the acre, and seven years ago an eighty-acre crop of corn averaged near eighty bushels to the acre. In 1840 Mr. Klinger and Sallie Marshall were united in marriage. She died in Ohio, leaving four children, two of whom are living. Henry married Emma Dale, has four children, Harry, Daniel, Charlie and Nellie, and lives on his father's place. In 1857 Elizabeth Gift became Mr. Klinger's second wife. She died, leaving five children, four of whom are living. Mary died in 1880, at the age of twenty-two; John N., Alice Belle, Peter and Emma are living at home. In 1873 Mr. Klinger married Mrs. Barbara Smith, who has had one child, Jesse W., since her last marriage (see Mr. W. H. Smith's name). Mr. Klinger has not been spared from filling some offices in the township. He has been school trustee, and in 1881 he was tax collector.

MR. A. J. KNAPP, farmer, Farmer City, is a native of Dearborn county, Indiana, from which place he moved to Piatt county in 1872.

He settled on land near his present home farm of 120 acres. He has made most of the improvements on his place. He has either rebuilt or moved onto it all the buildings. Some 200 rods of tiling has been put in, besides some open ditches which have been made. About 100 fruit trees and 1,200 forest trees have been planted. The entire farm is in good condition for tilling now, and for making a nice home for the owner. Mr. Knapp was married in 1867, to Mary J. Swales, a native of Indiana, and has had three children, two of whom are living, Frank E. and John S. He went to the army in 1862, in Co. H of the 83d Ind. Inf., and remained until the close of the war. The following are the principal battles he engaged in: Chickasaw Bayou, siege of Vicksburgh, Resaca, Arkansas Post, Jackson, Kenesaw Mountain, Atlanta, and he went with Sherman to the sea. He was first lieutenant for seven months. In 1880-1 Mr. Knapp killed a Canada lynx, which is probably the only one which has ever been seen in the county.

MR. WILLIAM A. KELLER, carpenter, Mansfield, is a native of Moultrie county, Illinois. He moved to Sangamon county, to Woodford county, and then came to Piatt county in 1865. His mother, a native of Virginia, died in Monticello. He moved in 1856 direct from Ohio to Piatt county, and settled within two miles of Mansfield. In 1875 he sold the farm and moved into Mansfield and went into the grocery business. He was justice of the peace a number of years. He was school treasurer about fifteen years, and is town treasurer at the present time. He was married in 1838, to Miss Eliza Falkenburg. Of his children, William died in the army; Elizabeth is the wife of Joseph Wooding (see his name); Theodore M. married Susan M. Miller, has two children, and lives in Kansas; Louisa married Alpheus Holloway; Amanda married H. C. Hyder, a native of Virginia, and Mr. Littleton's partner in the grocery business, has one child and lives in Mansfield; Charles M. was married in the fall of 1880, and is railroad agent at Hammond.

from Pennsylvania and moved to Macoupin county in 1856. Mr. Langley moved to his present farm of 320 acres in 1864. It formerly belonged to Mr. John Keenan, and was one of the first settled places in Blue Ridge township. Mr. Langley has been farming, and until the last two years has had a nursery on the place ever since moving to the county. He now has an orchard of two hundred trees and has twenty acres of fine walnut and maple groves. In 1881 he built a commodious house of twelve rooms. It is in the midst of a grove of trees and presents a fine appearance. Mr. Langley and Celia A. Curtiss were united in marriage in 1859. Four of their six children are still living, Elmer E., Freddie L., James C. and Roy. Mrs. Langley's mother makes her home at Mr. Langley's. His father is still living, but his mother died over a year ago. Two of Mr. Langley's brothers, Russell S. and D. Porter, settled in this county, but the one is now in Nebraska while the other is in Minnesota. Mr. Langley is present supervisor of Blue Ridge township.

MR. WILLIAM M. LINDSEY, farmer, Blue Ridge, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved directly to Piatt county about fourteen years ago. He bought his present farm of 320 acres soon after coming, has improved it and has lived on it ever since. He was married in Ohio to Rebecca J. McKelvey and has had seven children, Joseph L., William G., Charles W., Flora B., Alfred A., Samuel S. and Robert M.

MR. V. S. LINDSEY, formerly a resident of Piatt county, is a native of Ohio. His father was from the Keystone State and his mother from Virginia. They moved to Ohio at an early day, and it was from that state that the subject of our sketch moved to Piatt county in 1866. In the same year he settled on the north half of section fifteen in Blue Ridge township and was the owner of section ten in McLean county. He once put the whole of section ten in corn. Seventeen teams ploughing at once did the work. While living on the farm Mr. Lindsey kept as high as 300 head of hogs, 300 head of cattle and 1,000 head of sheep. At one time he hauled three loads of wool to Champaign which sold for \$1,816.40. When he first came to the county after the war he was surprised to find the people wanted to sell out. He bought his tract of land for \$8.33 $\frac{1}{3}$ an acre. But soon a change came over the country. Real estate advanced rapidly. He remembers of eight land buyers taking dinner with him at one time. When Mr. Lindsey first located in the county he once offered a man fourteen cents a bushel for oats. His offer was not accepted for some reason and the oats were hauled to Champaign where they sold for eleven cents a bushel. Mr. Lindsey sold his 960 acres of land to Mr. C. W. Fairbanks for \$33,600. At the time of the sale the whole place was in pasture and there were ten miles of hedge fence on the farm. Mr. Lindsey had lived on this place about eight years. After coming to this part of the county, however, he spent three years of his time educating his children in Champaign. After leaving the farm he located in Farmer City, where he had bought a large brick house of ten rooms and forty acres of land for \$3,575. He now owns a section of land in Champaign county and 230 acres in DeWitt county. Mr. Lindsey was married in July, 1849, to Eliza C. Simmons and has had three children, two of whom are living. Mary Virginia is the wife of Emory F. French (an agricultural implement dealer in Farmer City), and the mother of three children. William M. married Fannie Cornell, has two children and lives in Farmer City.

GEN. JOHN LUTZ MANSFIELD (deceased) was born in Brunswick, Germany, in 1803. He was educated at Gottingen, where the celebrated and national university of Brunswick and Nassau is situated, and also at Heidelberg. At the age of twelve he had never seen a book on mathematics. After buying his first algebra he shut himself up and did not stop until he had mastered the book. He was educated for an astronomer, and was once offered the charge of the observatory at Jena. He was examined in mathematics by the celebrated Gauss, one of the first mathematicians of the age, and was awarded the highest honors. His education was broad. He was a fine student in language and literature, and was well versed in the different styles of architecture. Mrs. Mansfield, when but nine years old, heard him deliver an address in Latin at the Transylvania University at Lexington. Gen. Mansfield was a great student all his life. The summer before his death he often spent fifteen hours a day in studying. He left the manuscript for a geometry and trigonometry which he expected to publish soon. The manuscripts, however, were destroyed when the residence burned, in 1878. Mr. Mansfield left Germany in 1823, and after remaining one year in England came to America, where he soon obtained a position in the Washington Institute. From this place he went to Lexington, where Judge F. L. Turner, one of the trustees, offered him the chair of mathematics in the Transylvania University. For one year he had entire charge of the school and taught all the classes. He was a professor at this school for a good many years. He was married in 1841, to Josephine Turner, daughter of Judge Fielding

L. Turner, of the criminal court of Louisiana. They moved from Kentucky to Indiana that they might educate their children in a free state. Their eldest son, Fielding, was made a colonel in the late war before he was twenty-one years of age. He married Miss Nellie Adae, of Cincinnati, has four children, and is a manufacturer of St. Louis; Margaret, the wife of M. C. Straight, of Indianapolis, has one daughter; Oscar married Miss Elizabeth Root, has two children, Josephine and an infant, and resides in Mansfield; Maria received her education at the State University, while Charley attended school in Wisconsin and at the University of the South, on the Cumberland mountains, Tennessee. Gen. Mansfield moved from Indiana to his land at and about the town of Mansfield in 1870, and was living at this place at the time of his death, September 20, 1876. He made several donations to the public, such as the park, two lots for a school-house, and a lot each for the Methodist, the Episcopal and the United Brethren churches. At the time of his death he owned about twelve hundred acres of land near Mansfield. When a child Mr. Mansfield was quite weak, but as he grew older endeavored to strengthen himself by carrying stones up the Hartz mountains and rolling them down. In his prime, however, he was considered one of the strongest men in the United States and his reputation as a gymnast was very great. Not only was he noted for his strength, but in Kentucky he was regarded as one of the most perfect gentlemen and scholars of the day. Mr. M. T. Scott, of Bloomington, at our request, kindly furnished some items in regard to Gen. Mansfield, which we are glad to insert. In the main we will use Mr. Scott's own words. He says: "I first knew Gen. Mansfield when, in 1843, he filled the chair of professor of mathematics in Transylvania University at Lexington, an old institution of learning honored in the distinction attained by its alumni, and honored earlier by the patronage of Gen. George Washington and Thomas Jefferson, who each gave $100 to aid in its establishment, more than ninety years ago. It was a great honor to Gen. Mansfield to have been selected to fill a place in that college, located in the 'Athens of the West,' as Lexington was then justly called, and was entitled to be so considered, by reason of the residence there of such lawyers as Henry Clay, the Breckinridges, the Wickliffes, the Marshalls and the Prestons, to which names might be added a long list of other lawyers at Lexington and in its neighboring villages, and the list of professors distinguished over the country, such as Drs. Dudley, McDowell, Cross and the Richardsons.

The name Gen. Mansfield bore when at Lexington was John Lutz, Esq., and which name he always honored, but it was changed by act of legislature at his own request for the purpose of Americanizing his name as well as his citizenship, an act evincing his loyalty to the country of his adoption hardly less than the periling of his life in the late war to save the Union, whereby he earned the title of general. The citizenship in your county of Gen. Mansfield and the influence and honor resulting therefrom to the city of Mansfield, is due to some extent to the investment of Gen. Mansfield's money by Mr. Milton and myself in the government lands now comprising, in part of his land locations, the estate he left at and about Mansfield, Illinois." Mr. Mansfield enlisted as a private in the late war, but in a few months was promoted to general and also held the position of brigadier-general and brevet-major-general.

MR. SAMUEL MCKEE, farmer, Mansfield, was born in 1823, in Athens county, Ohio. He moved to Indiana about 1830, and in 1842 he came to Piatt county, Illinois. His father was in the Black Hawk war. He came to Illinois after his son did and lived here for several years, but moved to Iowa, where he died, leaving his last wife and several children, who still live there. Samuel came out to this county by himself, and when he got here he had just $5, one-half of which he loaned. That $2.50 was all that kept him in Illinois, he says. He began working as soon as he could and continued laboring hard for several years, and finally bought the farm he now lives on. The money he bought the place with was obtained by hard days' labor. He says he never had fifty cents given him in his life. He owns two farms of 160 acres each. He has put all the improvements on his home farm. He has planted at least five hundred trees, and in 1874 built a large frame house. A wire fence, probably the best around a private yard in the county, divides the yard from the road. He is gradually adding improvements to his place, all of which shows Mr. McKee to be a successful and energetic farmer. When he first came to the county he was quite a successful deer hunter. He remembers of being one of a company who killed a very large deer, the largest he ever saw, on Camp creek. Dr. Hull was one of the party. Mr. McKee remembers of counting one hundred and thirty deer in one gang. The subject of our sketch was first married to Miss Penitta A. Wright, who died, leaving two children. Of these, Mary E. married Charles Jess, has two children, Laura and Mary, and lives in Blue Ridge township. John McKee is not married. In 1852 Laura Jelly became Mr. McKee's second wife. She died in 1869, leaving five children, one of whom has died. Amanda became the wife of Elsie Ashby, who died, leaving two children, Lillie and Walter; William H. married Lizzie Brown, has one son, Loren, and lives near Mansfield; George W. and Frances S. are at home. Mr. McKee was next married in 1872, to Mrs. Rogers née Margaret Adel. She was a native of Ohio, from which state she moved to Piatt county. Her husband died, leaving three children, two of whom, George and James, are living. Since her last marriage she has had two children, Arthur and Charles.

MR. ROBERT MCKEE, farmer, Mansfield, is a native of Ohio, and is of Irish and German descent. He moved to Indiana when small, and lived there about twenty years. He then moved to Champaign county, where he lived several years, and then entered land one mile east of Mansfield in the spring of 1854. He was married in Indiana in 1841, to Martha Nana. They have seven children living: Ira married Anna Chambers, has three children, and lives on Mr. McKee's place; Hiram married Elizabeth Johnson, has two children, and is also living on his father's place; Marilla married Wm. Raney, has three children, and lives in Champaign county; Cornelius married Mary Brown, and lives on Mr. McKee's place; Mary J., Franklin and Robert are at home.

MR. ADAM MELIZA, farmer, Mansfield, was born in Virginia in 1830. He is of German descent. His parents, also from Virginia, emigrated to Indiana in 1832. In 1854 they moved to Illinois, and both died here. Mr. Meliza's grandfather was in the war of 1812. Mr. Meliza settled in De Witt county in 1856, and in 1865 he moved to his present home of seventy acres in Blue Ridge township. He bought the land of Mr. Jos. Moore, a resident of Pennsylvania. He has put all the improvement on the place, from the plowing of the first furrow to its present condition. Several hundred forest trees have been planted, and there is a three-acre orchard. The present neat house was built two years ago. A portion of it, however, was built soon after he bought the place. Mr. Meliza was married in 1852, to Anna Minnick. They have had four children. Eliza C. married Wm. Collins, and lives in Blue Ridge Township (they have three children, Edgar F., R. Guy and John); Sarah Christina is living at home; Wm. L. married Priscilla McGath, has one child, and lives in Blue Ridge township; Frank H. is living at home.

He moved from there to McLean county about 1851. He moved to Livingston county next, and about 1874 settled in Piatt county. He owns 240 acres, upon which he has put a good deal of improvement. At least one hundred and fifty trees have been planted and some ditching has been done. He was married in 1854, to Harriet L. Hopping, and has had nine children, seven of whom are living, Chas. H., Jas. Franklin, Albert, Harry, Ira, Hattie and Thomas. Mr. Moberly has been roadmaster and school director.

In 1876 they came to Piatt county and bought land. There are 213 acres in the farm. Over 130 trees have been planted on the place, some tile ditching has been made and some fencing has been done. Quite a nice seven-room frame house was erected in 1881. Mr. Miller died in 1879, leaving five children: Susan Emily married Fleming F. Osburn and has one child, Effie May; Lizzie Blanche, Frank L., Clara M. and George Arthur are all at home. Mr. Miller was a member of the Baptist church for thirty years before his death. He was a kind, indulgent husband and an affectionate father. He died after four months' sickness, very resigned and happy.

MR. A. F. PITTMAN, farmer, Mansfield, was born in Ohio in 1813. He moved from there to Illinois in 1853 and in 1854 moved to Piatt county. The barn was built in 1872 and a neat frame house was completed in 1881. He has had some extra good crops of grain. In 1879 his corn averaged sixty bushels to the acre. He was married April 24, 1831, to Catherine Bake, who was born in 1815. They celebrated their golden wedding in 1881. About sixty-two persons were present. They were on the ocean forty-six days, and Mrs. Kroell was sick every day. Mr. and Mrs. Kroell first settled in Ross county, Ohio, and after living there twenty-three years moved in 1869 to Macon county, Illinois. They next moved to Monticello, Piatt county. Mr. Kroell died in this county. When living on a farm four miles southwest of Mansfield, Mrs. Kroell married Mr. Samuel Patterson, who only lived about three and a half years after his marriage. Mrs. Patterson moved to Mansfield when there were only four or five houses in the place. She bought lots of Gen. Mansfield and built the house she now occupies. She opened the first boarding house in the town, and kept it until the spring of 1881. A few times stopping at Mrs. Patterson's boarding house was sufficient to convince any one that she did herself great credit in her work. She has five children living: Elizabeth Kroell, formerly a milliner and dressmaker, of Monticello, married Mr. Clemens, now a bookkeeper in Indianapolis, and has one child; Louis Kroell was at home during the summer of 1881, and had the management of the first brick-kiln started in the vicinity of Mansfield; Chas. He came to America in 1806, and died when eighty-four years of age. His mother was of Irish descent. The subject of our sketch studied his trade in Ohio. He built a mill in Urbana, two in Champaign, several in Piatt county, besides others in the state. Mr. Richner considers this as good a county as there is in the state, and did what he could to locate the railroad in the county. He donated $50 to the Chicago & Paducah railroad. After moving into Mansfield, in 1874, he worked in a mill for a time, but in 1879 opened a butcher shop. He was married in 1879, to Alice Plummer, and has one child, Essie. Mr. Richner seems to have a preference for a certain date. He moved to Champaign county, to Piatt county, and was married on April 8.

The principal battle he took part in was that of Chickamauga, where he was captured by the rebels and retained over fourteen months, in which time he was at Atlanta, Belle Island, Richmond, Danville, Charleston, Florena and Andersonville. While at these places he lost his health in a measure. He escaped twice from prison, once getting five miles away, and again sixty miles, but both times he was chased down by bloodhounds, and was made to retrace the sixty miles on foot from 4 P.M. to 10 A.M. of the next day. It is his opinion that the book recently written about Andersonville is not overdrawn; that the half was not told in it. Mr. Snell is a member of the I.O.O.F. lodge.

MR. F. SULLIVAN, harness maker, Mansfield, is a native of Ireland. He came to America in 1850, and settled in Vermont in 1851. He owns 160 acres upon which he has put all improvements. The farm is in a good condition. A neat house and barn has been built, and about 1,000 rods of tiling has been put in. He married Lide Robinson and has had three children, Omer, Nora and Ray. Mr. Smith has not been left out of all the township offices. He has been school director and pathmaster.

MR. A. S. B. SMITH, farmer, Farmer City, was born in Indiana, from which state he moved to Piatt county in 1872. He bought his present home-place of eighty acres in 1874, and has made all the improvements on it except a hedge. Tile ditching has been made to the extent of 250 rods, and there are about eighty rods of open ditching. The crop which brought Mr. Smith the most money for the amount of land used was his potato crop of 1881. He had three and a half acres of peachblow potatoes, which averaged eighty bushels to the acre, and for which he received one dollar a bushel. He was married in 1877, to Bettie Cox, and has had two children, Effie and Arthur.

MR. D. W. SMITH, farmer, Farmer City, was born in Indiana in 1829. His parents were from the same state and of English and German descent. His father's people were early settlers of Pennsylvania, and his grandfather was in the war of 1812. Mr. Smith moved to Piatt county in 1857, and now owns 220 acres of land in his home-place, and has made a good many improvements since buying it. He was married in 1854, to Mary Smith, and has had seven children, six of whom are living: Fannie, a student of the Normal University, is living at home; Ralph C. married Linnie Cox; Sebra E. who has attended the State Normal; Florence L., Emma F. and Elmer J. are at home.

MR. MICHAEL THOMAS, farmer, Farmer City, is a native of Ohio. His parents were from Kentucky and Pennsylvania, and died in Illinois. His father went to Chillicothe, Ohio, when there was but one house in the place. From there he moved to Indiana in 1827, and in 1841 to Missouri, and in 1847 he settled in Illinois. Michael moved to Piatt county in 1864, and bought the place he lives on, which is now owned by two of his sons. He used to hunt all over Blue Ridge township, and he says that if congress had offered to deed him land at that time he would have taken it as an insult. He assessed the township about the year 1866. He went all over it on foot and received thirty dollars for the work. He was assessor at another time, and has been school director. At an early day he remembers of hauling corn to Champaign for ten cents a bushel. He was married in 1830, to Mary Marsh, and has had thirteen children, nine of whom are living: Abraham died in the army; George married Susan Meliza, and lives in Iowa; Almira married William F. Hicks, and lives in Kansas; James went to the army, lost his health, both of mind and body, and is now at home; Columbus married Anna Henline, has four children, and lives in Kansas; A. Thomas married Nancy Smith, has two children, Fred and Dick, and lives in Blue Ridge township; William married Nancy Perry, has one boy, Abraham, and lives in Blue Ridge township; Robert lives at home. Mr. Thomas was married again in 1867, to Mrs. John Hart née Catharine Kiuser, who had four children by her first husband, one of whom, Hanna Alma Hart, is living. Since her last marriage she has one daughter, Nellie May, who is at home.

MR. ISAAC W. THOMAS, formerly a resident of Piatt county, came with his parents to Illinois in 1847. He was married in 1856, to Elizabeth Stucky. They have had five children, but none are living now. After marriage Mr. Thomas lived in Blue Ridge township, on the state road, until 1864, when he moved to Farmer City, where he now lives.

MR. P. M. TAYLOR is a native of Virginia, and is of Irish and English lineage. His parents lived and died in Virginia. He lived in Virginia until 1871, when he moved onto a farm about four miles from Mansfield. After living during the summer on the farm, he moved into Mansfield. He and Mr. S. H. Alexander owned the second store building in Mansfield. He afterward built the house he now lives in. At the present time (1881) Mr. Taylor is police magistrate and notary public. He was married in 1837, to Ann V. Hider. He was married again in 1877, to Frances E. Johnson. One daughter, Harriet A., married Minor Cunningham, December 25, 1868, and has six children. A niece, Fannie Taylor, has made her home at Mr. Taylor's ever since she was three years old, ever since her mother's death.

MR. GARRETT VAN METER (deceased) was a resident of Virginia. In 1852, through an agent, he entered six and a quarter sections of land in the vicinity of what is now Van Meter Station. The land remained idle until in 1864, when Jacob Van Meter began breaking it. The owner of the land never saw it but once, and that was in the fall of 1864. He died about the close of the war, and his widow moved to this county in 1867. A portion of the land has been sold, but she and her nine children are living on the remaining part. Her son, Solomon, married Miss A. Parsons, has two children, William Thomas and Lelia Vernon, and lives in Blue Ridge township. Jacob Van Meter was married in 1857, to Anna M. Harness, a native of Virginia. Seven of his children are living: Margaret is the wife of Robert Sherard, a grain merchant in McLean county, and has one child. His other children, Kate, John, Oliver, Susan, Nannie T. and Sally H. are at home. He moved onto the farm in 1864, and built his present residence about one year later. He now owns eighty acres of land, upon which he has put all the improvements. He donated the land for Fairview school-house. He has been commissioner of highways, was school director for eighteen years, and held the office of supervisor for four years. Mr. Charles Van Meter improved the farm of 160 acres which he lives on. He has planted about a thousand trees on the place, and has built a neat frame residence on the south side of the Ridge. According to Gen. Mansfield, the ground is sixty feet higher than it is at Mansfield, and the name of the home is "Fairview" or "Sunnyside." Mrs. Van Meter, her sons Garrett and Isaac, and her daughter Tabitha live with Charles Van Meter in this house. William C. married Maggie Chambers, and has five children, Nora O., Kenny C., Lena H., Tabitha V. and Virginia. Ann Rebecca Van Meter is the wife of Rev. M. Crews, a Methodist minister, and lives near Van Meter switch; Miss Tabitha's land is under cultivation, and there are three houses on it. Garrett Van Meter owns 160 acres of land, upon which he has planted some 200 trees. He has put in 200 rods of tiling, and every acre of land is under cultivation. Sally Van Meter was married in 1876, to Mr. Edwin S. Cunningham, who moved into the county in 1881. They own a farm of 320 acres, which is all under cultivation. There are two houses on the place, and preparations are being made for other improvements. Mr. Garrett Van Meter Sr., used to own some land in Moultrie county. His agent there in selling the land made some mistake in the titles, and not long since one of the buyers found the title of his land questionable. He started out to find the signers of the deed, and accidentally found that there were some Van Meters in Piatt county. He came in search of them, and in a very few hours after his arrival had seen every one of the nine signers of the deed.

MR. H. M. VINING, farmer, Mansfield, is of English descent, and was born in Ohio. He moved from Franklin county to Piatt county, Illinois, in 1850, and in 1871 moved into Mansfield, where he owns three houses and six lots. He also owns 120 acres of land in Blue Ridge township, which is all under cultivation. His father was one of the Worthington Company, from Massachusetts and Connecticut, which located in Ohio in 1804, and he was in the war of 1812. Mr. Vining was married in 1849, to Mary J. Ruckman, who has lost one child. They have raised two children not their own. Nancy Ruckman, now Mrs. George Davis, has six children; Maud Slater is still at home, and the name of the other is Ida Shepherd. When Mr. Vining came to the county he had but $4.50. Mr. Argo seemed to be his best friend. One winter his last $5 bought a barrel of fish, and the family had to live on that with what they had raised. He did not come to the county too late to miss all of the trials common to new settlers.

MR. RICHARD WEBB, an early settler of Piatt county, now living in Farmer City, was born May 6, 1799, in Shelby county, Kentucky. His parents were from Virginia, and settled in Kentucky "when the Indians were scalping." His father, though over age, took his eldest son's place in the army, and was killed in the war of 1812. His mother came to Illinois and died here. Mr. Webb moved to Illinois November 16, 1833. He first settled in Illinois on Salt creek, and a portion of his land was within the present bounds of Piatt county. He rented his farm near Farmer City, and entered forty acres, which was a portion of what has long been known as the Gardner farm. He made the first improvements on this place. After living here about four years he sold out to James Watson. On July 28, 1828, Mr. Webb and Hettie E. Watson were united in marriage. Their daughter Caroline became the wife of James Busey, has three children and lives in Missouri. Dulcina died when seventeen years old. Mary J. married John Williams, who died, leaving two children. She next married Charles Williams, has five children and lives in Farmer City. Armilda became the wife of William W. Watson, and has seven children living. Henry W. married Sophronia Campbell, has three children and lives in Farmer City. Lucy Ann married F. J. Hefling, and died in 1875. Charles Allen, who has been deaf and dumb ever since he was two years old, was educated for eleven years at Jacksonville. He is now at home. William G. married Emma Shaw, has two children, Fred F. and Louis Allen, and lives in Piatt county. The first Mrs. Richard Webb died in 1847, and Mr. Webb married Mrs. Anderson, née Elizabeth M. Hulsey. She is a native of Indiana, was reared in Kentucky and was married in Bloomington to Dr. John Anderson. He left one daughter, the wife of Mr. John Cheney, of Bloomington. Only one of Mrs. Webb's last four children is living. Miss Laura, one of the most successful teachers in Farmer City, although not a graduate, attended school at Bloomington, and has quite a good practical education. The subject of our sketch carries his age well. He says he has good health, and has had for forty years. His hearing is good. He thinks he owes a share of his good feelings to the fact that he takes a glass of warm water each morning.

MR. JOSEPH WOODING, farmer, Galesville, was born in Northampton county, England. He came to America when fourteen years old, and landed in Pennsylvania, but his folks settled in New Jersey. He moved from there to Fulton county, Illinois, and in 1860 settled in the northern part of Goose Creek township. Mr. Wooding's mother and three of her sons came to Illinois, but Joseph is the only one now left. Mr. Wooding moved onto the place he now lives on in 1870. He owns 156 acres, upon which he has put all the improvements. About five hundred fruit trees and seven hundred walnut trees have been planted. There is open ditching to the extent of 300 rods, and 160 rods of ditching has been made with a mold ditcher. In 1874 a good-sized ten room frame house was erected. Mr. Wooding has been successful as a farmer. In 1871 his corn averaged seventy bushels to the acre, and in 1880 the average was fifty bushels. In 1878 and 1879 his wheat averaged forty bushels to the acre. He was married January 1, 1866, to S. Elizabeth Littleton, and has had five children, two of whom are living, Willard Earl and Stella Pearl. He has not escaped his share of office-holding since living in the county. He has been school director, and was trustee for nine years. Mr. Wooding says that when he first came to the county no consideration could have persuaded him to remain, had he not leased the land where he was. He experienced some of the hardships incident to the early settling of any country. Mr. Wooding kept house once while his folks went to Fulton county, and for two whole weeks he "never saw a living soul." He related to us his thoughts when he found the first wolf he had seen in the county. He started after it with a dog, and he was so certain of the capture of the animal that he even pictured to himself the manner in which he would snatch it by the heels and beat it to death. He soon saw that his plans and the wolf had gone "a-gley."

MR. WILLIAM WARREN, farmer, Mansfield, came from England to America about 1855, and remained in Auburn, New York, several years. He then came to Piatt county, and remained until 1862, when he left his family here and went to California, returning in 1865. He was married in 1859, to Ann E. Gordon. They built their present nice residence in 1874. They have five children, John Franklin, Nancy Jane, Thomas Henry, Emily and Charlie, all at home. Mr. Warren returned to England on a visit in 1875.

MR. JOHN WARREN, farmer, Mansfield, is from Sussex county, England. He came to New York in the fall of 1853, and about 1859 came to Illinois. He was married in England, to Miss Isaacson. Of his children, John married Miss Wolf and lives in this county; and the names of the others are Mary V., Josephine K., George T., Susan and Anna. Mr. and Mrs. Warren were the first married couple to leave Exning, Suffolk county, England, for America. Their fathers are still living in England, and the Warren brothers here have paid their father's rent in England for twelve years. When Mr. Warren first came to the county he worked for Cope & Willis. He began with $40 in money, and now owns 200 acres of land, which he has improved himself. He moved to the present home place in 1866, and now, comparatively, their trials are over. The family belonged to the Episcopal church, and after coming to the county, did not hear their own church service for fifteen years. They were on the prairie without trees so long that Mrs. Warren actually forgot "when apple trees bloomed."

MR. S. R. WALKER, Mansfield, is of Scotch and English descent, and his childhood home was in Saratoga county, New York, and in the vicinity of some of the revolutionary battle-fields. Stillwater and Bemis Heights were not far distant. In the battle which occurred

October 7, 1777, Gen. Frazer received his mortal wound fifteen rods distant from, and was carried to, Mr. Walker's home. Mr. Walker has a piece of a plank of the floor of the house in which Gen. Frazer died. Mr. Walker has many relics from the battle-fields referred to, where skeletons of a number of men were plowed up. He has a copy of Burgoyne's orderly book and a register which contains the autograph of John Q. Adams and several other great men of the United States. We are very glad to have this opportunity of speaking of Mr. Walker's interesting relics. Mr. Walker was married twice in New Jersey. He came to Illinois in 1865, and his second wife died in Champaign county. He moved to Mansfield, April 3, 1870. At this time the station house was unfinished. He acted as agent for the railroad for a time for nothing, when he was employed as agent, and remained such until 1875. He was also a lumber merchant and dealt in farming implements. He thinks the first article shipped to Mansfield for sale was a corn-planter for C. W. Van Meter, and it is yet good. Mr. Walker was made postmaster August 5, 1870. He was married in Bloomington, in 1872, has six children, three of whom are at home, and lives in one of the first and largest houses in Mansfield.

MR. EDWARD WALKER, Mansfield, was the first station agent at Blue Ridge, and began work in December, 1877. He was first postmaster too. Mr. Walker was married April 4, 1877, to Miss Alice M. Roseberry, and has two boys, John R. and Earl D.

MR. J. W. WALKER, merchant, Mansfield, was born in Ross county, Ohio. He moved from there to Macon county about 1865, thence to Champaign county, then to De Witt, and finally located in Piatt county in 1876. He began immediately as a merchant, and owned the building he now occupies, but has sold it, and is building a commodious business house, the largest in town, 22×70 feet; the upper part will be used for a hall. He expects soon to use it for general merchandise. He owns the dwelling that is on the lot with business house. Mr. Walker was married in Champaign county about 1872, to Eliza Cunningham, and two of their four children are living, Harlow A. and Roy. Mr. Walker has been township collector for two years. His grandfather was in the war of 1812.

DR. I. M. WELLS, Mansfield, was born in 1814, in Pennsylvania, but was raised in Ohio, to which state he was brought by his father when but two years old. Dr. Wells moved from Ohio to Wisconsin, where, in Calumet county, he remained nineteen years, and then moved to Piatt county in 1872. He studied medicine under a physician, and after coming to this county did a small amount of practicing in connection with his drug business. He was married in 1841, to Elizabeth Penrose, who died, leaving one daughter, Mary E., who married Hugh McDonald, and lives in Ohio. He was again united in marriage in 1853, to Susan Miller, and has three daughters, Edwina, Eudora and Berletta. Dr. Wells went to the army from Wisconsin in Co. E of the 21st reg., and served from 1862 to 1864, taking part in many skirmishes and the battles of Perryville. Since coming to the county he was elected justice of the peace.

MR. GEORGE A. WHEELER, farmer, Farmer City, a native of Connecticut, moved from that state to Peoria county, Illinois, when thirteen years of age, and in 1867 settled on his present home-farm in Piatt county. He owns 159 acres of land, and donated one acre to the Bethel church. He has made all the improvements on the place, including the planting of some 800 fruit trees, and the making of ditches sufficient to put the entire place under cultivation. The best corn crop he has raised was eight years ago, when from sixty acres he got about 4,200 bushels of corn. He was married December 11, 1867, to Martha Milam, and has had five children, Charlie E., Frank L., Ida M., Edgar A. and George L. He is road commissioner at the present, has been school director for three or four years, and is trustee of the Bethel church.

MR. JOHN WARNER, farmer, Mansfield, is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Champaign county in 1853. He moved to Piatt county in 1854, and has lived here ever since. He married Elizabeth Cherry, and has nine children living: Jacob is in Kansas; Sarah married Wm. Kinser, and has three children; George, Renben, Jerry, Mary Ann, Chas. and William are the names of the other children.

MR. A. J. WYSONG, contractor and builder, Mansfield, is of German descent, and is a native of Ohio, from which state he moved to Indiana. He came to Illinois in 1869, and in 1872 located in Mansfield, where he owns a dwelling-house and carpenter shop and one lot. He has been contracting for and building houses in and about Mansfield for about eight years. He built Mr. Pittman's and Mr. John Dickson's residences, and at present is building a store-building for Mr. J. W. Walker. Mr. Wysong was married about 1874, to Lavina Hilligoss, who died, leaving two sons, Ottie and Theodore. At present he is a member of the town board.

ADDITIONAL MATTER.

MR. WM. BRYDEN (deceased) moved from Scioto county, Ohio, to Piatt county in 1846. A distant relative of his, James Bryden, had been in the country the year before, and induced him to move there. He bought a farm near the head of Goose creek, and lived on it until his death. The place is still known as the Bryden place. Mr. Bryden's eldest daughter, Mary, became the wife of Hiram Dillon, who owns a farm in Goose Creek township. She died in 1881, leaving one son, Robert; Katharine married James Piatt; James Bryden first married Miss E. Swain, who died, leaving one child. He next married Mary Sadorus, has several children and lives in California. Wm. Bryden, who died in 1866, married Mary J. Piatt; Robert Bryden recently moved to Kansas; Jack Bryden is married and lives in Kansas; Olive became the wife of Noah Piatt, and now resides in Kansas. Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Bryden met with a serious accident which caused his death. After the return of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Piatt from California, Mr. Bryden and his wife started to ride down to inquire about their relatives in California. When near the residence of Mr. Ezra Marquiss, their old nag became frightened and threw them from the buggy. Mr. Bryden was so injured that he died in a few hours. Mrs. Bryden was severely injured, but recovered. Her death occurred several years after that of her husband.
